Kaiser Arrives and Clasps Hands of George V. Before Edward's Bier.

30,000 TROOPS IN LONDON

Thousands of Persons Staying in the Streets All Night to Get Good Places to See the Procession.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, May 20.—King Edward will be laid to rest to-day in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, after two weeks of mourning, which have given rise to scenes unparalleled in the history of the world.

To-day's obsequies will be a magnificent tribute from the powers of the world to the memory of Edward the Peacemaker. Nine monarchs will ride behind his coffin; first his successor, King George, and then the rulers of Germany, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Norway, Greece, Belgium, and Bulgaria. It will be the most numerous assemblage of crowned heads ever brought together in any European city, with the solitary exception of the gathering at the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria. It is a notable fact that every one of these nine monarchs is a descendant of that William the Silent, who was assassinated in 1584 at the instigation of his kinsman, Philip II. of Spain.

Russia will be represented by the Grand Duke Michael, the brother of the Czar, and the Princes Fushimi and Tsai Tao will bring the sympathy of the Orient. Over a score of royal Dukes and hereditary Princes will swell the mounted cortège, behind which will come a dozen state carriages conveying Queens and Princesses, and, as notable figures as any in the procession, two plain citizens of the two great republics of the world—His Excellency the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt and His Excellency M. S. Pichon, to give them the designations adopted in the official order of the ceremonial published in The Gazette.

London's millions and great crowds of visitors from the provinces, the Continent, and America will line the route of the funeral procession through streets which to-day took on a mourning garb of crepe and royal purple.

While the body of the King is being committed to the vault at Windsor all England will, so to speak, stand still in sympathy. Factories will cease work, the trains on all the railways will be halted, and the telegraph and cable wires will be idle.

Throughout to-day, as yesterday, there was a ceaseless procession of people through Westminster Hall, where King Edward's body lay in state. It is estimated that over 400,000 persons filed before the coffin since the lying in state began, although the difficulties and delays which met all those desirous of paying this tribute were enough to discourage any but the most determined.

At 4:30 o'clock this morning the streets are filled with streams of people flowing toward the line of the funeral procession. Charing Cross Station is disgorging thousands from early trains.

The people are nearly all carrying bags and parcels with food. Hawkers in scores are selling official programmes.

There has been a sharp thunderstorm, but the weather is now clear, and it is believed that it will continue fine during the day.

LONDON, May 19.—Emperor William arrived in London at noon to-day. The German imperial yacht Hohenzollern reached Sheerness last evening, but the Emperor did not land until this morning, when he proceeded to the capital. At Victoria Station the Emperor was welcomed by King George, his majesty's eldest son, the Duke of Cornwall; the Duke of Connaught, Prince Henry of Prussia, and other royalties and diplomats.

The greeting of the monarchs was most affectionate. From his cousin the Emperor turned to the young Duke of Cornwall and kissed him on both cheeks.

As the Emperor and King George drove to Buckingham Palace great crowds in the streets exhibited lively interest in the German ruler. The men raised their hats, and the women waved their handkerchiefs as the royal carriage passed. Arriving at the palace, the Emperor was taken at once to the apartments of the Quen Mother Alexandra, where there was an affecting meeting.

This afternoon Emperor William paid a tribute to the memory of his uncle, the late monarch. Accompanied by King George and their suites, he went to Westminster Hall, where thousands of persons of all classes were passing the bier. The Emperor approached the casket and remained before it for some minutes. He personally placed upon the casket a magnificent wreath. He then knelt by the catafalque and for a few moments was engaged in prayer.

Upon rising to his feet his Majesty turned to King George, who had knelt with his cousin before the bier, and held out both hands, which the other grasped. Both monarchs were visibly affected.

For the few moments while the Emperor and the King knelt beside the coffin the thousands who were waiting in line to file past the catafalque were held in check, though those within Westminster Hall were permitted to remain. The striking scene as the two monarchs grasped hands, standing with bowed heads beside the body of King Edward, greatly moved all those who witnessed it.

Nine crowned heads of Europe and several heirs to thrones sat down in Buckingham Palace to-night at a dinner which King George gave to all his eminent guests assembled in London for the funeral of King Edward to-morrow. The guests included Mr. Roosevelt. After the

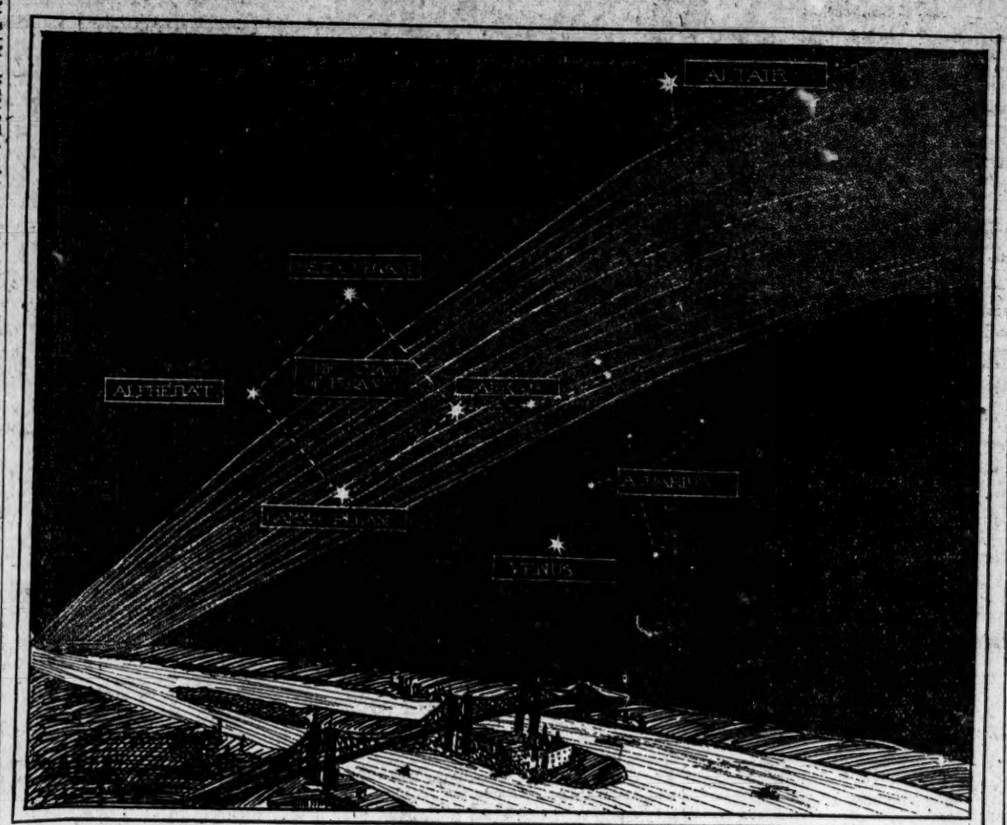
THE COMET'S TAIL AS SEEN FROM THE TIMES TOWER BETWEEN 2:30 AND 3:15 A.M. YESTERDAY



Sam's Bay, Wis., comes this report of an interesting phenomenon:

"Following closely on the unexpected conditions that prevailed early to-day, when the tail of Halley's comet was plainly seen in the east, astronomers at Yerkes Observatory to-day were further bewildered by an apparition across the face of the sun at noon.

"A broad spectrum of light extending across and a considerable distance to each side of the sun attracted the attention of the observers. Prof. E. B. Frost, who first sighted the phenomenon, declared he had never before witnessed its like. Prof. E. E. Barnard said the same. Prof. Frost telephoned to observers within a radius of 100 miles of Williams Bay, calling attention to the peculiar occurrence. The band last less than half an hour.

"Sun spots seen Wednesday afternoon, followed by brilliant displays of northern lights last night, and these in turn succeeded by varied reports of fiery streamers shooting across the horizon to the southwest, had been passed by the astronomers as having absolutely no direct connection with the comet. But the band across the sun was another story.

"Although I cannot advance an opinion at this time,' said Prof. Frost, 'I can see no other cause but the comet for the appearance of the spectrum.'

"He believed that the two were related in some unexplained way. The passage of the earth through the tail of th comet, delayed a day in its schedule, is believed to be taking place to-night, although early observations did not give positive proof of this.

"Shattering all scientific calculations and puzzling the astronomers, the tail of Halley s comet appeared in the eastern sky early to-day at a time when the authorities had agreed it would be in the west.

"Such eminent astronomers as Prof. S. A. Mitchell of Columbia University, New York; Prof. Edwin B. Frost, head of the Yerkes Observatory staff, and Prof. Edward Barnard of the University of Chicago agree that the glow of light they saw in the east was the comet's tail. Prof. Mitchell, Prof. Frosct, and Prof. Barnard say that any of these three explanations may be right:

"First, the curvature of the comet's tail, first discovered and noted by Prof. Barnard on Tuesday night, may have developed to a wholly unexpected degree, while the head of the comet has passed the earth on schedule.

"Second, like Borelli's comet of 1903, Halley's comet may have ceased its tail-making activity, cutting off the glowing fan that is now puzzling the scientists.

"Third, it is possible that all calculations are wrong, and that the comet has not yet passed the earth.

"As nearly as could be computed, the period of the appearance of the comet's tail in the east extended from 10:30 o'clock Wednesday night to 3:20 o'clock this morning. It was still plainly visible at a time when the astronomers were confident the earth would have passed completely through the tail.

Theories Disproved by Facts.

"After leaving his telescope at daybreak, Prof. Frost issued this statement:

"'Greater than all the theories and all the computations are the facts. And the fact is that the tail of Halley's comet has been appearing in the east in practically the same place it has appeared since yesterday morning. There is no question about that. The tail which glowed from the horizon, close to the milky way, before midnight until dawn has not yet passed across the earth. That is a certainty. In addition, it is also certain that there is no material diminution in the size of this tail, as compared with the tail of the day before.

"'We are confident that the calculations for the passage of the head of the comet between the sun and the earth are correct. Unquestioned astronomical authorities, working independently of each other in all parts of the world, arrived at these calculations, which have been corrected in detail ever since the comet passed Venus, on May 2.

"'We are also confident that the head of the comet made the transit as per schedule. But the mystery of the appearance of the tail in the east this morning is the great puzzle. It cannot be explained satisfactorily at this time.'

"A brilliant moon in the night proved to be a serious handicap to the scientists behind the batteries of cameras and telescopes trained on the sky. Early observations were impaired and work with the cameras cut off to a considerable extent by the moon. Despite this condition the astronomers at the observatory maintained their vigil until daylight. When the moon set several of them were repaid to no little extent for their patience.

"At this time certain observations were made that may be of importance in adding to the knowledge of comets. There was compensation for the scientists, in a spectacular exhibition of auroral lights and in some meteoric phenomena. The scientists said they believed there existed no direct connection between the aurora and the comet."

On arriving at THE TIMES Tower at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday night I found that two or three earlier arrivals had noted electric flashes and auroral displays in the northeastern sky. An auroral glow observed at 10:15 o'clock was reported as umbrella-shaped, white in the centre and red at the edges. The writer and others observed intermittent flashes, varying from red, white, and yellow, between 10:37 and 11:22 o'clock, when a flash of unusual brilliancy startled the watchers on the tower. It resembled an arch of glowing white surmounted by a crest of crimson. The display occurred above a bank of mist some 5 degrees above the northeastern horizon.

It was not of any considerable breadth, and appeared more like a wave of color against the dark background of the sky than a wide band of light. The moon, which was shining brightly, interfered seriously with the observations. Its rays dulled possible electrical displays, and what might have been brilliant flashes appeared faint in its glamour.

At 12:15 o'clock the air, which had been balmy, as on a Summer evening, grew decidedly chilly, and the north and northeastern part of the city gradually became enshrouded in mist. It spread by degrees over the entire city, enveloping the lights on Queensboro Bridge, which had been shining so brightly earlier in the evening, in temporary gloom. Each moment the all-pervading mist partially hid from view the outlying districts of New York, which till then had been plainly visible. The chilliness increased and continued until 1:15 A. M., an hour later, when the mist cleared away as unexpectedly and as mysteriously as it had come. The gloomy pall lifted, and the chilliness was gradually replaced by the same balmy temperature which prevailed earlier in the evening.

At 2 o'clock I observed a meteor in the direction of the eastern sky, plunging swiftly in a northeast direction, and visible for a fraction over five seconds. It resembled at first a pear-shaped ball, three times as large as Venus, leaving a streak some 5 degrees in length as it flashed downward. It appeared about 75 degrees above the horizon, and disappeared at about 10 degrees in the direction to the right of Queensboro Bridge as seen from THE TIMES Tower.

At 2:30 o'clock the moon, ruddy in hue, was low down in the western sky. Looking again in the direction of the eastern horizon, a white mist could be seen drifting over the bridge, and reaching upward beneath the Square of Pegasus. A soft glow of grayish hue now became plainly visible, spreading from Pegasus as far as Cassiopeia's chair. The light of the moon no longer interfering made this observation possible. At 2:34 o'clock this soft glow of grayish hue extended in the northeastern sky to over the left of Queensboro Bridge, as seen by the observers in the tower, who also noted a dimness in the lights in the direction of Flushing Bay. They now seemed to be veiled in mist. At 2:40 o'clock the wind seemed to rise again, and the watchers on the tower felt cold, but not chilled as they had been between 12:15 and 1:15 o'clock.

At 2:45 streamers could be seen reaching upward from the northeast away under Gamma Pegasus, and curving upward through Aquarius, as far as Altair, the bright blue star in Aquila. At its widest part, just beneath the first magnitude star Altair, the width of the band was about ten degrees, and throughout its length had a brilliance equal to that of the Milky Way, near which it terminated. The path of this band of light was very nearly that along which the comet was last seen by the observer. The band of light remained visible until a little after 3 o'clock.

The second meteor of the evening was seen by an observer on the tower between 2:40 and 3, but unfortunately the writer fails to find record of the exact instant of apparition. It was seen in the same direction as the one which appeared at 2, and from the momentary glimpse obtained by the writer it was tinged with blue. At 2:55 Venus was observed almost over the centre of Queensboro Bridge, and might almost have been mistaken—as, in fact, it was by one of the watchers—for a fire balloon. However, as it rose steadily upward there was no doubt as to its identity as Venus, the bright morning star. Meanwhile the streamers, which proved to be the wraith of the comet, were gradually fading from view.

At 3:15 o'clock a pale blue light illumined the northeastern sky above the purplish gray mist low down on the horizon. The stars in the Great Dipper and Cassiopeia were still shining brightly, seemingly in a vain endeavor to excel the splendor of Vega and Altair. Vega was almost directly over the flagstaff in the tower, and low down, immersed partially in the blue light, was the radiant Algol, the so-called Demon-eye by the Arabians. It had risen above the horizon to join the celestial host in obtaining a farewell view of the straggling streamers of the comet ere they faded in the glow of dawn. The comet will next be visible in the western skies, above the place where the sun has disappeared, and shortly after sunset, which occurs this evening at 7:15 o'clock in New York. The comet sets at 8:15 P. M.

At 4:25 o'clock red streaks made their appearance in the eastern sky, and Venus paled as rosy-fingered dawn drew aside the curtain of day. A sea of burnished hue was revealed glistening on the shores of an island of dark gray mist. Above this, at 4:36 o'clock, rose the first gleam of gold, steadily rising higher, like an inverted globe, until finally the sun shone full-orbed and clear in the morning sky.

MARY PROCTOR.

ASTRONOMERS ALL AT SEA.

Many Explanations Advanced for Failure to Meet the Tail.

Leading astronomers throughout the world strove yesterday to find some explanation for the trick Halley's comet, and particularly its tail, played on them and the rest of the world Wednesday night.

Prof. Harold Jacoby, Rutherfurd Professor of Astronomy at Columbia University, last night said the new turn in the affairs of the comet observed by Miss Mary Proctor from the Times tower and other astronomers at Princeton, Yerkes Observatory, and elsewhere, when it was thought to be surely and safely in the west, was most dramatic and unexpected. Last night Prof. Jacoby, as his colleague, Prof. S. A. Mitchell, now at the Yerkes Observatory, had done earlier in the day, threw up his hands, remarking that after all one must pin his faith to observations rather than to the best mathematician's figures.'

Fooled the Astronomers.

The astronomers had calculated that by 5 o'clock or so yesterday morning (New York time) the earth would have passed through the tail of the comet, and when they thought the thing was done and were actually saying that their theories of the earth's meeting with this stranger without a perceptible phenomenon were vindicated, up from the east came the tail, showing that the earth had not even reached it.

One theory advanced was that the comet had actually dropped its stall, which thereupon had drifted off into space.

Speaking of this suggestion last night Prof. Jacoby called to mind that it would soon be possible to check its accuracy. The comet ought to be plainly visible in the west soon after sunset to-night or certainly to-morrow night, and if it still has a well-developed tail one of two things is certain, it has not lost its tail, or, on the other hand, its tailmaking ability is unimpaired.

Tail's Curvature Kept It Away.

Professor Jacoby thinks it extremely probable that whatever the ordeal might be, it was spared to the earth through the rather unexpected curvature of the tail. His idea of this curvature was somewhat broader than that held by several leading astronomers, in that it involved a possible shortening of the tail to less than 15,000,000 miles, so that it slipped by the earth without touching it. He advanced still another theory, this being that the tail had curved in such fashion that the earth had been permitted to get through at its elbow unscathed.

Prof. Jacoby said he was never more surprised than when he read in THE TIMES yesterday morning that the earth had evidently not been through the comet's tail at all, but that the tail had actually been observed till nearly daybreak by Miss Proctor from the Times tower.

Prof. Jacoby expressed his admiration for the patience and perseverance of Miss Proctor, which made possible the announcement to THE TIMES's readers yesterday morning of the fact that the comet's tail was still in the eastern sky at a time when by all the calculations of the astronomers, the earth should have passed through it and left it in the west.

Prof. Jacoby was asked if it were not very probable that when the comet's tail approached the earth it had been repelled by the electric forces with which the earth is pitted. He thought the explanation of the evident reluctance of the tail of the comet to approach this planet ingenious and plausible, but whether true or not he could not say.

Comet Not Visible Last Night.

Prof. Jacoby went to Riverside Park, at the foot of West Seventy-sixth Street, at sunset last evening and stayed there until nearly 9 o'clock, half expecting to get a first but faint glimpse of the comet in the western sky just after sunset. Though he and hundreds of other observers peered into the western sky above the Palisades, they saw nothing of the elusive wanderer.

First, Jacoby's progress along the walks of the park was often halted by persons who, recognizing him, sought from him explanation of the extraordinary behavior of the comet's tail on Wednesday night. Wherever he was stopped by one a crowd soon clustered about him, and he had to go into many explanations.

Prof. Jacoby thought those at vantage points would get a good view of the comet to-night in the West if the sky was cloudless.

BAND OF LIGHT WAS THE TAIL.

Naval Observer Has Another Theory of Phenomenon.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—There is no doubt that the broad band of light seen this morning from the top of the Times Building in New York and reported in a later edition of THE TIMES, was the tail of Halley's comet. While all over the country people who sat up were disappointed at the failure of anything to happen, from several observatories comes confirmation of the fact that the comet actually did appear and that contrary to scientific forecasts the world over it showed in the east.

Much wonder still exists as to exactly what did happen to modify the expected course of the visitor. An interesting theory is advanced by Prof. Asaph Hall of the Naval Observatory. According to his theory the deep curve that has developed in the comet's tail was such that after passing through the most tenuous part of the tail the earth was inside the curve and still had another plunge through the streamer to make before getting quite clear. This, in his opinion, explains the unlooked for discovery of the comet in the east as set forth in THE TIMES this morning.

"The tail of the comet was seen by Prof. Morgan," said Prof. Hall, "a little before 2 o'clock this morning, just about the time the moon was getting low in the sky. A little later several other persons connected with the observatory, who were watching, saw the tail, which extended from below the horizon almost up to the Milky Way, or nearly eighty degrees. The probable explanation of this appearance of the tail is that the earth should have passed through it a little after 10:30 o'clock last night, but instead the tail was seen in the east.

"This was probably due to the fact that the earth did actually pass through some of the less dense parts of the tail, but the main part was curved away so that the earth passed through it some hours later, the particular time not being known."

Halley's comet was not visible to-night from the United States Naval Observatory. The western sky was heavily clouded until late at night, and the astronomers at the Observatory were unable to make any observations. Prof. Asaph Hall of the Naval Observatory said that unless the earth passed through the comet's tail to-night it would not do so on this visit of the comet. Indications of atmospheric disturbances were noted on the telegraph wires, receiving instruments in the telegraph offices emitting peculiar hissing noises.

The Capitol Building to-night was transformed into a temporary astronomical observatory for the benefit of Senators and members of the House and their friends. Four five-inch telescopes procured by Elliott Woods, Superintendent of the Capitol, from the Naval Observatory were installed on the west portico of the building, and many statesmen and their friends participated in a comet party.

CHARACTER OF THE SUN SPOTS.

Prof. Rickard Thinks They May Be Affected by the Comet.

SAN JOSE, Cal., May 19.—Prof. Jerome S. Rickard of the Observatory of Santa Clara College issued this statement last night in regard to the sun spots which he has been watching since they began to develop on May 12:

"After nearly two months of rest the solar surface is showing a recrudescence of activity, well worthy of a maximum period. On May 18, at 1 P. M., there could be seen a large, intensely blue colored spot, convex to the westward, concave to the eastward, in shape nearly like a half-moon.

"As a master spot it had a retinue of fourteen little ones, or pores, following in the rear on the eastern side, led by a vanguard of one taller and bigger than the rest. It was about twelve hours east of the solar axis. West of the north and south line through the centre of the sun, at a distance of a few degrees, stood another group of three spots, a big one and two smaller ones. The first and larger group is probably eight degrees north latitude and the second is about ten degrees, same latitude.

The largest black spot measures 286,318 by 79,778 miles. The smaller group appeared on May 12 and was single, then became triple. The larger group was first seen on May 15 as a family of seven, then of nine on May 16, of eight on May 17, finally of fifteen on May 18.

"Why this sudden change on the star of day? It may be held, indeed, it is well-nigh demonstrated, that the rise and the wane of sun spots and faculae are due to planetary influences. The greatest of the world's long-range forecasters is going by the planets' positions. I go by the sun spots and faculae. Our dates always agree. Therefore, planets and sun spots are indissolubly connected.

"Halley's comet may be viewed and ranked as a formative planet. Therefore, it must have an influence on the sun, and consequently with the weather. There were two slight and short seismic manifestations at 6:25 P. M. on two instruments."

"The diameter of the tail at the point in which we are especially interested, 14,000,000 miles from the head, was about eight degrees. If the tail at daylight had been almost in contact with the earth we should have expected the angular diameter to be much greater than it was. The tail was therefore probably several million miles away, in which case the earth and the tail did not meet this morning.

"If this meeting is delayed until to-night then there can be little doubt the earth will not pass through the tail at all, but will pass to the south of it. The reason for this is simple. The tail lags behind in the plane of the comet's orbit; the comet's orbital plane makes an angle of 18 degrees with the earth's orbital plane; the retardation of the tail therefore draws it away from the plane in which the earth is moving, and the earth will pass to the south of it. The observed position of the tail this morning was appreciably further north than that of yesterday morning.

"This lagging of the tail produces an interesting situation. If we could have observed the entire comet this morning we should have seen the head of the comet well below the sun and the tail extending far above the sun. We have been so nearly in the plane of the comet's orbit during the last fortnight that it has been impossible to observe directly the lagging of the tail for the curvature has been away from us. If the observer were situated out in space, far to the north, or the south of the earth and the comet, he would undoubtedly have been able to see the tail strongly curved backward with reference to the direction or motion of the comet.

"Our conclusion yesterday that the tail was lagging was based on the fact that the angular diameter of the tail did not increase rapidly as it should have done had the tail been pointing exactly away from the sun."

MAY MISS THE TAIL.

Prof. Russell Thinks We May Meet the Southern Edge, Though.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 19.—Although bright moonlight makes observations of the comet difficult to-night, Prof. Henry N. Russell of Princeton's astronomical department expects to be able to make a satisfactory observation at about 3 o'clock to-morrow morning, in reference to the reported statement by Dr. Campbell of San José that we might not pass through the tail of the comet at all, Prof. Russell said to-night:

"From the appearance at Princeton this morning, it looked as if it was likely that we would pass through the southern edge of the tail. Prof. Campbell, however, observing three hours later, would be in a better position to make a more accurate estimate, and it may be that we will pass just outside of the tail."

Prof. Russell declared that the reason the earth had not yet reached the comet's tail was that the tail was curved away from the earth, and although the head of the comet had crossed the sun's disk, the tail would not reach the earth until later.

In a statement to the Associated Press, Prof. Russell says:

"At 3 A. M. to-day the sky was brilliantly clear, without trace of moonlight or dawn. The comet's tail was conspicuous in the east as a band of light about eight degrees wide and quite straight, about as bright as the fainter branch of the milky way between Cygnus and Aquila. Its central line passed about midway between the stars Alpha and Gamma Pegasi, and its end was lost in the milky way in Aquila.

"No trace of the tail could be detected beyond the milky way, and no illumination could be seen in the western sky in spite of careful search under very favorable conditions. The zodiacal light was visible in the southeast and around from the comet's tail by a dark interval about ten degrees in breadth.

"The tail was apparently between two and three times as wide as on the morning of Tuesday, May 17. If its real width has not changed it must still have been fully one-third as far from us on the 19th as it was two days before—which would make the time of the earth's passage through it come on the morning of the 20th. If this is the case, the central line of the tail where the earth's orbit cuts it is about 4,000,000 miles behind the prolongation of the line joining the sun and the comet, and the line from the comet to this point (which may be taken roughly as the line of the tail) makes an angle of about twenty degrees with the line just mentioned. The tail if viewed from a point outside its plane would appear strongly curved, as was the case with this comet when it could be so observed in 1835."

CONFIRMS BESSELL'S THEORY.

Harvard Astronomers Say Observations Show the Tail Rotates.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 19.—The report that the tail of Halley's comet was sighted last night in the east by three well-known astronomers, despite the fact that the nucleus probably did pass between the earth and the sun late last night, was received with much interest but no great surprise by the astronomers at the Harvard Observatory.

The Harvard astronomers declare that the tail is lagging far behind the head of the comet. They say the report tends to confirm the theory first evolved by Bessell when Halley's comet appeared in 1835, that the tail rotates.

This theory of the rotation of the tail of a comet has been under discussion for many years. It was thought to be noticeable in Moorehead's comet of last year. It means that the tail of the comet changes its position or inclination according to its position relative to the plane of the earth's ecliptic. The Harvard astronomers said yesterday that they did not think the earth would enter the tail of the comet, if it did at all, for many hours after the head passed between the earth and the sun. This sighting of the tail in the east last night apparently bears out their theory.

This dispatch was received at the Harvard Observatory to-day from Prof. W. W. Campbell of Lick Observatory:

> Halley's comet was visible in the eastern sky this morning. Its tail was at least 140 degrees in length, and lags far behind the radius vector. The earth will probably not pass through the tail.

Prof. Campbell's observation of the tail shows that it stretches across the heavens from the eastern horizon, through the zenith, and more than halfway down toward the western horizon.

The dispatch agrees with a statement by the Rev. Mr. Metcalf, the Taunton astronomer, who this afternoon expressed the opinion that the earth would pass south of the tail of the comet. Mr. Metcalf doubted if the tail of the comet would be visible to-night, owing to the brightness of the moon.

FUTILE COMET EXPEDITIONS.

Astronomers in Hawaii See Sun Spots, but Fail to Detect the Visitor.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 19.—The balloon expedition to explore the tail of Halley's comet, which began here last night at 6:35 o'clock, ended in a wheat field near Hillview, Greene County, Illinois, at 11:20 o'clock. The balloon traveled 65 miles. Prof. George O. James of Washington University, who made the trip with John Berry, pilot, and Andrew Drew, had with him an aeroscope, an aneroid barometer, a thermometer, and a telescope.

"I noticed no phenomena which I could confidently attribute to the effect of the passing of the comet's tail," said Prof. James. "There was no faint phosphorescence in the skies, no auroral display, and no showers of meteors within our vision such as many astronomers had predicted."

VALLEJO, Cal., May 19.—Observations which Prof. T. J. J. See in charge of the Government observatory here sought to make just before sunset last evening were prevented by a heavy fog, which overspread the sky. The early evening sky, watched through the clouds, showed no unusual phenomena or meteoric displays. Disturbances of electric currents were noted at the Government wireless station.

HONOLULU, May 19.—The astronomical expedition from the University of Ohio, in charge of Profs. Coddington and Lord, stationed at Waialua, failed to obtain any observations of the transit of Halley's comet across the face of the sun as the weather was cloudy all day.

Prof. F. Ellerman of the Carnegie Observatory at Mount Wilson, Cal., and his party of American astronomers, who crossed 3,000 miles of the Pacific to see Halley's comet, sighted the arm reported last night at 4:30 o'clock, returning to Pasadena after failing to see the comet, as predicted, at the moment of transit.

From their temporary observatory at Diamond Head near this city they saw the sun spots, but not the comet. Reports to the same effect were made by Prof. J. S. Donaglio of the Hawaii College Observatory on Kaimuki Hill. The weather was perfectly clear. Both astronomers agree that the comet contains nothing solid large enough to be visible through a 6½-inch telescope against the background of the sun.

MEXICO CITY, May 19.—Owing to the fact that the sky was obscured by clouds the Director of the Tacubaya National Observatory was unable to make any observations of importance last night. Prof. Felipe Valle reported that a red streak of light extended across the heavens and also late in the afternoon he saw what appeared to be a meteor burst among the clouds.

PASSED THE SUN ON TIME.

Carnegie Observers Say the Earth Is Close to the Tail.

MOUNT WILSON, Cal., May 19.—It was announced at the Carnegie Observatory to-day that Halley's comet passed the sun on schedule time last evening and the sun rose this morning ahead of the nucleus of the wanderer. The earth is close to the nearer wall of the tail and likely to enter it at any moment, according to an official statement.

At 2 o'clock this morning, Pacific Coast time, Prof. E. A. Fath, who has been conducting the observations here, made this statement:

"The tail of Halley's comet is this morning apparently in the same position in regard to the earth that it was at the same time yesterday morning. This would indicate that the earth has not yet passed through the denser portion of the tail. If we are in the tail at all it is probably but the edge. So far our observations have shown no special aurora lights nor have any meteors been observed."

"Dr. Henry N. Russell is an authority whose views are entitled to consideration," said Dr. Fath when informed early this morning of the Princeton astronomer's opinion that the earth had not yet passed through the comet's tail.

"I quite agree with him in regard to the curvature of the tail of the comet. More than that we are not absolutely certain of at this time. Because of the strong moonlight which has prevailed all night we have been unable to detect any thing."

PHENOMENA OBSERVED ABROAD.

BERLIN, May 19.—The Abercorn was the only balloon among a large number making ascensions in Germany which succeeded in getting observations of Halley's comet.

The aeronauts report that they reached an altitude of 11,385 feet. They noted extraordinarily brilliant horizontal lights like meteors. They obtained four bottles of air at that height, which will undergo expert examination for meteoric dust and other ingredients. The aeronauts were compelled to descend owing to an electrical storm.

The balloon Busley attained a height of 15,000 feet and the balloon Hildebrandt reached 13,600 feet, but without results.

The Empress, the Crown Prince and Crown Princess, and other royalties visited the Potsdam observatory to-night and watched the sky for a long time, but they failed to see the comet.

BILBAO, May 19.—A large aerolite, followed by the aurora borealis, was seen from here last night.

CUENCA, Spain, May 19.—Telegraphic communication was disarranged throughout this vicinity last night by an electrical disturbance.

MADRID, May 19.—Cloudy weather prevented observations of the comet's passage from Spanish observatories.

LISBON, May 19.—Torrential rains fell throughout Portugal early to-day, and a search of the heavens by the astronomers was impossible.

PARIS, May 19.—Bad weather rendered futile the elaborate preparations which French astronomers had made to register the phenomena in connection with the passage of the earth through the tail of Halley's comet this morning.

The balloons which were to sample the air at high altitudes did not ascend.

ADEN, May 19.—At 4:30 o'clock this morning the tail of Halley's comet appeared as the rays of a gigantic searchlight.

The head was invisible.

ST. THOMAS, D. W. I., May 19.—Halley's comet was visible in its usual eastern position this morning.

Its enormous dimensions appeared fourfold greater than a week ago, the tail stretching over two-thirds of the firmament, although the head had not yet risen above the horizon.

No unusual phenomena were observed last night.

WILLEMSTAD, Curaçao, May 19.—Crowds congregated in the streets witnessed, between 4 and 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, a change in the solar disk much like that observed before an eclipse. The phenomenon was pronounced.

JOHANNESBURG, May 19.—According to the observations made at the Transvaal Observatory, of which R. T. A. Innes is the director, the earth had not traversed the tail of Halley's comet at dawn to-day.

The tail was still north of the ecliptic, and at the observatory it was thought probable that the earth would pass considerably to the south of it.

Transvaal time is 6 hours and 58 minutes earlier than New York time.

FEAR IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

Most of the Moslems Spent the Night on the Rooftops.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 19.—Most of the Moslems spent last night upon the rooftops, quaking with fear at the disaster they believed to be impending with the passage of the comet.

Families were united so that they might meet the expected cataclysm together.

THINKS NUCLEUS NOT SOLID.

Jesuit Astronomer in Philippines Believes Old Theory Disproved.

MANILA, May 19.—Father Algue, the astronomer, believes that the long cherished scientific theory that a solid composition forms the nucleus of comets is now disproved. He says that exhaustive observations of Halley's comet, made from 3:30 to 11:30 A. M. to-day at the Jesuit observatories at Manila, Baguio, and Antipolo, failed to reveal a trace of solid matter. The weather conditions were perfect, and the observers were assisted by three natural sun spots, which facilitated the detection of solids.

Many of the natives were frightened last night by a magnetic storm, which disarranged the electric power service, extinguishing the lights and interrupting the street-car service for a few moments.

HOADLEY COMET CLUB.

Formed in the Knickerbocker Ready for Next Appearance.

About the only tangible thing the comet has left along Broadway is the Comet Club. It was formed last night at the Hotel Knickerbocker, whether on the roof or in the café was not announced. According to J. H. Hoadley Treasurer and the prime mover, the club will be really incorporated to-day and will have its first meeting on Monday. The officers are J. K. Burnham, President; H. H. Melville, Vice President; John M. Shaw, Secretary, and A. G. Wheeler, Jr., Chairman.

"The club will start off with fifteen members," said Mr. Hoadley last night, "and it will be increased to seventy-five, one new member being added each year until that number has been reached. When the comet again visits us seventy-five years hence there will be seventy-five members. Only relatives or heirs of the original fifteen will be eligible for membership. We are going to try and get in it men who have reputations in the scientific world.

"You'd better drop around Monday night and see just what we are going to do. It ought to be as interesting as the comet's tail."

Will View Comet from a Balloon.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—Prof. Charles L. Doolittle of the Flower Observatory of the University of Pennsylvania to-night accepted the invitation of the Philadelphia Aeronautical Recreation Society to make an ascension in the large balloon Philadelphia II. for the purpose of making observations of Halley's comet. The ascension will take place to-morrow night, and it is hoped to reach a high altitude.

PNEUMONIA CURED BY USE OF VACCINE

Only Eight Deaths in 83 Cases Treated by Pneumo-Bacterin, or 9.7 Per Cent.

A REMARKABLE REDUCTION

Formerly the Death Rate Was Never Below 25 Per Cent. and Frequently Ran to 40 Per Cent.

Dr. F. E. Stewart of Philadelphia has furnished an interesting article on the use of vaccines in the treatment of pneumonia to American Medicine. The material collected by Dr. Stewart apparently goes a long way toward establishing the fact that much is to be hoped for from the new treatment. Dr. Stewart writes.

"The theory of bacterial vaccines is that in bacterial infections the infected body absorbs bacterial substances and products. According to the amount of bacterial substances and products absorbed, immune substances are produced. When much is absorbed sufficient immune substance is usually produced to cure the disease, but when little is absorbed not enough immune body is produced to cure the infection, which then becomes chronic.

"Acting in accordance with this theory, an appeal was made to the medical profession of Massachusetts by Dr. Timothy Leary of the Tufts College Medical School, having as its object a collective investigation of pneumo-bacterin for the purpose of determining its value in the treatment of lobar pneumonia. This appeal was made after three years' experience in the use of bacterial vaccines by Dr. Leary.

"Before taking up the subject the author placed the bacterin in the hands of several groups of medical men and obtained reports of eighty-three cases. Pneumococcus vaccine was furnished for the treatment of thirty-four cases of the alcoholic type, of whom six died, (17. per cent.)

"In a larger series of cases of ordinary pneumonia (forty-nine) 15 per cent. came to crisis in three days, and but two deaths were reported. The total deaths for the series of eighty-three cases were eight, or 9.7 per cent." (The usual death rate is from 25 to 40 per cent.)

"For the purpose of obtaining data from a sufficient number of cases to furnish material for a definite conclusion, Dr. Leary states that a fund was established, through the munificence of public-spirited citizens, by means of which he was enabled to furnish pneumococcus vaccine without cost to physicians in Massachusetts desiring to take part in the collective investigation of this product.

"Especial attention was called to the following important points:

1. Early diagnosis. Do not wait for the appearance of rusty sputum.
2. Early administration of pneumo-bacterin. Use the vaccine treatment the moment that a diagnosis is established. The function of vaccine treatment is to stimulate the immunizing machinery of the individual to react and produce substances (opsonins) which will influence the bacteria by preparing them for ingestion. The patient plays an active part in the process, and if success is to be obtained must have sufficient resisting ability to react under the stimulation of the vaccine.
3. Necessity of full doses, 10,000,000 to 50,000,000, progressively increased in acute cases, every four to eight hours. The negative phase is either ephemeral or absent.
4. Harmlessness of the vaccine treatment.

"After receiving quite a large number of reports from the profession in various parts of the State Dr. Leary changed his doses to 100,000,000 of killed bacteria once in twenty-four hours.

"Willcox and Morgan state that they have treated twenty-four cases of acute pneumonia with bacterins. They administer 20,000,000 to 50,000,000 stock pneumococci as soon as the patient goes under treatment. After forty-eight hours a second dose is given if it seems necessary.

"After this the autogenous vaccine is used if further doses are indicated. It was found best to decrease the dose as the patient approached the crisis, as he became more susceptible to inoculation at this time. In many instances there was a fall of temperature immediately following inoculation and the dyspnoea (shortness of breath) and delirium became less.

"The duration of the disease appeared to be shortened, the crisis occurring before the usual time in six cases. The temperature in eight of the cases fell by lysis (gradually) instead of crisis. The benefit was most pronounced in those cases which ran protracted courses."

Other physicians report the successful treatment of a suppurating disease in which the pneumococcus is found by means of pneumo-bacterins. One reports thirty-six cures in forty-seven such cases, while nine of the remaining ten were relieved. Leary himself has cured many such cases by the same treatment.

Dr. Stewart reaches these conclusions:

"It would seem from the above evidences that the pathological conditions resulting from an acute pneumococcic infection can be relieved, removed, or modified by injecting subcutaneously killed bacteria of the species causing the diseased condition.

"The collective investigation now under way in Massachusetts is attracting the attention of the profession, and it is hoped that a verdict will be reached supported by sufficient evidence to make it conclusive."

Held for Abetting a Prizefight.

Charged with aiding and abetting a prize fight, John W. Sullivan, a boxer, known in pugilistic circles as "Jack Twin" Sullivan, was arrested yesterday in Brooklyn on a bench warrant issued by District Attorney Clarke. In the County Court he was held in $500 bail for trial. Sullivan was billed to meet "Al" Benedict recently in the Clermont Avenue Rink, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Marathon Athletic Club.

Find New Evidence in Lustig Case.

The sentence of Maurice Lustig, convicted of having murdered his wife, Rhoda, by poison, was postponed yesterday by Judge Foster until May 27. Counsel represented that they had come into possession of some newly discovered evidence which might furnish a basis for the granting of a new trial.

dinner the members of all the suites were introduced to the King.

It is noteworthy that, though the presence of so many rulers and Princes must necessarily throw a great sense of responsibility upon the authorities and the police, all move about quite freely and no word is heard in the press or public places of any apprehension of untoward incidents.

London to-day filled rapidly with visitors from the provinces and abroad. The whole line of the funeral route was from early morning until late at night a surging mass of people, viewing the final preparations and purchasing seats. The stand business, however, has been greatly overdone, and seats for which $25 or $50 was asked a few days ago are now being hawked from $5 to $10.

The neighborhood of Buckingham Palace and the Government offices, and the great houses has to-day seen a constant flitting of royal carriages with foreign representatives paying formal visits. Almost all the official visitors went to see Sir Edward Grey at the Foreign Office this afternoon.

Thirty thousand soldiers from Aldershot and other military stations are camping in the parks to-night. The weather is hot and thunderstorms are not improbable. Many thousands of persons will pass the night in the streets in order to obtain points of vantage from which to view the cortège.

All London is garbed in mourning. Four thousand evergreen wreaths, received by the committee of ladies from all parts of the country have been hung along the route, and great masses of flowers are to be seen everywhere.

A trial trip was made to-day by the royal train which will carry the body to-morrow from London to Windsor. The royal saloon has been upholstered in purple and white silk. A catafalque has been erected in the centre. In this train will travel King George and Queen Mary, the Queen Mother, Alexandra, eight other sovereigns, and the near relatives. Special trains will convey the high officials, the foreign representatives, and the special envoys to Windsor.

TRUCKLOADS OF WREATHS

Placed on Lawn at Windsor—Tributes from Taft and Roosevelt.

WINDSOR, May 19.—The lawn adjoining St. George's Chapel, a few yards from the tomb in which the body of Kind Edward will be placed to-morrow, presented to-day the appearance of a huge flower shop, so great was the wealth of wreaths received from all parts of the world. Truckloads of floral offerings arrived at the castle throughout the day.

Tributes in every conceivable form, from a cross of orchids measuring fourteen by seven feet, sent by the Sultan of Zanzibar, to a tiny bunch of wild flowers from some workman's home, covered the place in a wonderful profusion of color.

The tribute of President Taft was a wreath of palm leaves and orchids entwined with an American flag of silk. Mr. Roosevelt sent a wreath of white orchids. There were also wreaths from the American Embassy and from Mrs. Reid, the wife of the American Ambassador.

The little town of Windsor has assumed a purple hue. From the station at the foot of Castle Hill, where the body of King Edward will arrive, to the Sovereign's Entrance to the castle every building, including even the churches, is covered with a mourning pall of royal purple. The stands erected in the open places have been enshrouded in a similar manner, so that the coffin, with the royal mourners, will pass through an avenue of the most sombre description.

Throughout the day hundreds of persons came to Windsor from London and the surrounding districts, and a continuous stream of motors and carriages poured through the castle gates, carrying more floral memorials.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S COSTUME.

Report That He Will Wear Evening Dress at the King's Funeral.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, May 20.—According to a note in one of this morning's papers, the costume which Mr. Roosevelt will wear during to-day's royal funeral has been a cause of considerable difficulty. It has now, it is added, been decided by the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl Marshal, that the costume is to be evening dress, with black waistcoat and black studs.

At this hour it is impossible to confirm or deny this statement, but at Dorchester House yesterday it was understood that Mr. Roosevelt would wear a frock coat, the regulation civilian costume for both Americans and Englishmen on formal da

EASILY WROUGHT PALLADINO WONDERS

Unconditioned and in Her Own Home She Performs for a Lady Journalist.

TABLE LEG BECOMES A CLUB

Three-Legged Table Dances to a Graveyard Breeze and Flowers Change Buttonholes—Tea After All This.

The Lady Journalist glided into Eusapia Palladino's dining room with a smile of tolerant awe on her face and a copy of last Sunday's paper in her hand. The pale faced youth who accompanied her also wore a smile of awe, but there was no toleration in his glance, and in his hand he carried a suitcase containing his camera and flashlight apparatus.

Yes, La Palladino told Mme. la Giornalista everything had been arranged for the séance at 10 o'clock. Meanwhile Mme. la Giornalista and her Fidus Achates were presented to the friends of La Palladino. These were Dr. Vecchio, an ancient friend and adviser extraordinary to the medium; Donato di Donato, the distinguished editor of a local Italian paper; Signor Vigorito and Signora Vigorito, the latter well known in legal and real estate circles of Little Italy, and Signor Smeragliuolo, the artist, and his bride, Signora Smeragliuolo, who is the sister-in-law of La Palladino.

The presentations having been accomplished with all proper decorum, and the hour of 10 being nearly arrived, the company proceeded to the room where the table, the cabinet, the toy piano, and other implements of mediumistic craft had been arranged, and where John—John the arch spirit, John the pirate—was supposed to be lurking in invisible yet potent fury.

Under the direction of the Lady Journalist, the pale-faced youth with the camera set up his apparatus and opened his matchbox.

La Palladino seated herself, and her new son-in-law, having brought forth a bundle of quarter-inch hemp cord, they proceeded to tie her legs and her hands; then her wrists were attached to the right wrist of the Lady Journalist, who sat on her left, and to the left wrist of Signor di Donato, who sat at her right. Others at the table were Dr. Vecchio and the Vigoriti. The circle was formed. Either Signor Smeragliuolo or Signora Smeragliuolo—John did not observe which—turned the light very low.

"Controllo?" sternly inquired La Palladino. "Controllo?" repeated the Italians. "Controllo," echoed the Lady Journalist. Then everybody waited.

Except for the cries of the children in the street, some voices in argument vociferating next door, and the rumble of an elevated train, all was quiet.

"Vieni, John!" commanded La Palladino. "Vieni, John," cried the Italians. "Come, John," whispered the lady journalist.

And John came.

Wonders for the Asking.

As usual, the first evidence of his presence was manifested through the raising and swinging of the table. This so excited the youth with the photographic apparatus that he touched off a flashlight. The proceedings were interrupted until the windows could be opened and the room cleared of smoke.

The circle was restored and John set himself to work again. The object which first claimed his attention was the toy piano, then a chair. These he caused to hop about the room and then, after a series of somersaults, to land on the table, where they remained long enough for the manipulator of the flashlight to take another picture.

There suddenly occurred a successive series of phenomena so sensational as profoundly to impress the sitters. A fluid hand which Dr. Vecchio recognized as that of his departed brother, after having tapped Signor di Donato on the chest a couple of times, drew from the latter's buttonhole a tearose which performed curious curves before the sitters and was finally fastened in the buttonhole of Dr. Vecchio's coat.

But this was not all. Suddenly the hand reappeared, this time bearing what seemed to be a human head, which, after it had made the round of the circle and had taken an aerial flight about the room, settled closely and caressingly against the face of Dr. Vecchio as though in the act of kissing him.

There were heard a number of loud raps, as from the strokes of a muscular hand, and this hand was felt in rude contact on the shoulders, the legs, the heads, and the faces of the sitters; and then this hand became more aggressive and insinuating and finally brandished a stick, but the blows it delivered did harm to no one.

The curtain of the cabinet blew out like a sail, as though pressed forward by the cool, damp breeze that is wafted across graveyards, and, being thus pressed forward, it fell upon the table.

A weird shape now seemed to gather itself together in corporeal form, like the ghost of Hamlet's father on the ramparts of Elsinore. The visitant hung low over Signor di Donato and articulated some meaningless words, such as Dante places in the mouth of Plutus: "Pape satan, pape satan, aleppe!"

The youthful illuminator of flashlights tipped over his camera and suddenly sat down on his dress suit case.

The lady journalist fainted.

Dance of a Three-Legged Table.

Fortunately, Dr. Vecchio was on hand, and John was kept waiting only a few moments. But John did not enjoy this waiting, and when the circle was restored he settled down to do his most artistic, diabolical work.

He first elevated the table three or four feet in the air; he wrenched out one of the legs and brandished it before the sitters, and pursued Smeragliuolo with it into a corner. Smeragliuolo was sore afraid. In the manner the stick was wielded he recognized the vanished hand of his departed mother.

Deprived of one of its legs the table became a prey to furious dancing and weird, unholy noises, and shivering raspings as when an iron door long unused is shut and the rust falls from it. Sounds were heard emanating from the cabinet. Then the more gentle spirit which earlier in the seance had extracted the rose from Signor di Donato's buttonhole presented before him three carnations, one of which the spirit placed in his hand, and another in the hands of Dr. Vecchio, after tantalizing the Vigoriti with them.

When came the end; the table turned a complete somersault and gave forth the seven ritualistic strokes of finality with so much force that its remaining legs were severed, while the toy piano swung in air, emitting notes of unknown melody from behind the tomb, or, in other words—words which should leave no possible doubt of the trustworthiness of the foregoing record—finalmente il tavolo facendo impetuose capovolte battette i 7 colpi rituali di chiusura, con tanta forza di far staccare nettamente de se gli altri sgambi, mentre il piccolo pianoforte librandosi in aria suonava girellando, emettendo note d'una musica sconosciuta d'oltretomba.

Sundry Adjectives.

There is, however, one point in the foregoing narrative which may not be confirmed by the story which the Lady Journalist is writing for her Sunday paper. While of no particular significance to either La Palladino or to John, it is of a certain importance to the Lady Journalist herself. It is this:

She declares that she did not faint. The fainting episode will, therefore, in all probability, not be found in her story. As to the rest she was and is most enthusiastic. "Extraordinary! Marvelous! Wonderful!" were the words she used, and her Fidus Achates with the suitcase repeated them. As both expressed it later: In the humdrum commonplaceness of metropolitan Sunday feature gathering, they had at length experienced something new, felt a new sensation, a new emotion, utterly unlike anything they had encountered before.

As the Lady Journalist, the flashlight artist, and the suitcase departed the wreckage wrought by John was repaired and La Palladino and her Italian guests sat down to a cup of tea.

Signor di Donato has since carefully noted the preparations being made for the séance in the Times Tower. Yesterday in his paper, Bolletino della Sera, he printed the text of the conditions signed by La Palladino, to which he added this comment:

"We shall undertake to inform our readers of the results of the séance, which is destined to have an echo in the journalistic and scientific world beyond the ocean."

Statement by Mr. Rinn.

Joseph F. Rinn, who has offered La Palladino $1,000 if she can produce a certain percentage (the exact figure has not as yet been agreed upon) of genuine phenomena at the projected séance, made a statement to a TIMES reporter yesterday, in which he said that his twenty years' experience as an unmasker of mediums, his work with Dr. Richard Hodgson, Prof. Hyslop, and others, and his long association with British and American Psychical Research Societies should preclude the idea that he was ignorant of the conditions claimed by mediums as essential for the production of their phenomena—as intimated by Hereward Carrington in his communication published in THE TIMES of Wednesday. Mr. Rinn said:

"Mr. Carrington overlooks this: Supernormal phenomena have never been established as a fact. It is absurd to base conditions of restraint and surveillance upon presupposing the existence of that fact. Until it has been proved that this fact does exist, it is absurd to attempt to do such an important thing as to define it. The conditions I and my colleagues want Eusapia to submit to are those which will simply prevent trickery on her part. Such conditions we shall insist on. Under these conditions, I should be pleased to lose $1,000 if by so doing I shall have helped to prove that unknown forces exist in nature such as are believed in by many.

"It is a waste of time to permit conditions which will allow the medium to utilize her normal powers."

Columbia Phenomena.

"Do you consider that the conditions at Columbia University were such as to preclude fraud?" the reporter asked.

"They were and they were not. Part of the merit of the exposure published by Profs. Jastrow and Miller has been vitiated by Profs. Pitkin and Montague, the very men who showed at the séances the least ability to originate any protective measures against fraud.

"At a final séance, the details of which have not yet been made public, given solely for the benefit of Profs. Pitkin and Montague, it was agreed that for about one-half hour Eusapia Palladino should have no interference, and after that she should be controlled. What happened?

"For the first half hour there were all kinds of phenomena, and then when controlled for two hours, where she could not by any method get th euse of her hands or feet which were controlled by Messrs. Davis and Kellogg, she produced not a single phenomenon.

"In spite of this fact Prof. Montague has the assurance to assert that she should have been controlled by mechanical means. This claim is absurd in view of the fact that, without mechanical means when controlled by persons who knew how, Eusapia could produce no phenomena.

"Bear in mind what I have already stated: 'Supernormal phenomena have never been established as a fact,' and how absurd becomes the idea of introducing the psychologist, the X-rays, and other absurd things to analyze and define what has not yet been proved to exist!

"In my opinion, Profs. Pitkin and Montague may be called the Lombroso and the Flammarion of America. They indorse what has not been proved to exist—the presence of supernormal force.

"One word more. Howard Thurston's offer of $1,000, if Eusapia Palladino could be proved a complete fraud, is a farce, as a complete negative could never be proved. The fact that he is a magician does not mean that he may not have been fooled at the sitting which inspired his offer. His predecessor, Kellar, thoughtlessly made a similar statement, which he regretted all his life. It was in regard to a slate-writing medium.

"I am inclined to believe that when Mr. Thurston offered $1,000 for an absolute negative—a logical, philosophical, and, as I believe, a physical impossibility—he was not acquainted as to how near that negation had been approached in the Columbia University sittings."

If Palladino Wins Her Case.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Possibly my reading of the conditions of investigation into the reality of the Palladino phenomena may be erroneous, but it will perhaps do no harm to sound a single note of warning.

As I understand the subject of the seance to take place in THE TIMES tower, success or failure, with incidental property right in two thousand-dollar bills, will be made to depend upon the "medium's" ability to convince the judges that a table has been raised ("levitated" being, I believe, the correct jargon) from the floor by an occult or mysterious power, briefly to be described without tangible push or pull.

I may of course be in error as to my premises, but would it not be unfortunate if the lady (as is highly probable she will) performs acceptably this apparent miracle, and the word goes forth that she has won her case and profit? The word "unfortunate" is used chiefly, it may be said solely, that at once innumerable people of mystic tendencies will claim as proved—or in the way of proof—all the pestilent brood of uncanny wizardry.

WILLIAM J. ROE.

Newburg, N. Y., May 18, 1910.

LOST $665 TO WIRE TAPPERS.

Brooklyn Chemist Thinks He Identifies a Man Arrested in the Street.

A studious-looking young man ran excitedly up to Traffic Policeman Charles Kelly, at Broadway and Forty-sixth Street, yesterday afternoon.

"That fellow has $665 of my money," he shouted, pointing to a well-dressed man of about his own age, who was walking off about half a block away. "He got it by pretending that he had some inside information on a horse race. I've been looking for him the last month, and I've appealed to Mayor Gaynor."

Kelly arrested the well-dressed young man and took him and his accuser over to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, where the studious-looking young man told this tale:

"I am John Parent of 310 State Street, Brooklyn, a chemist. About a month ago I saw an advertisement on the racing page of an afternoon paper, promising large returns to any one who wanted to bet on a horse race. I answered the advertisement and, after some correspondence, agreed to meet this man at Fulton Street and Broadway on May 1, with $665 of my savings.

"He said he knew a telegraph operator who could give us advance racing information. We went to a house at Fifty-sixth Street and Eighth Avenue. We entered a room which I understood was right alongside a poolroom. There was a lot of noise next door, and suddenly a man in his shirtsleeves rushed in and gave this man the name of a 'sure winner.' I gave this man my $665, and both the men went out. I haven't seen them since until I met this man on Broadway this afternoon. I wrote to Mayor Gaynor, after appealing to the police."

The man whom Parent accused said he was Walter Clayton, a theatrical manager, 30 years old, of 242 West Fifty-second Street. He said he was [illegible] was locked up at [illegible]

HUDSON PARK PLAN KILLED IN SENATE

Measure to Meet Conditions of Harriman and Other Gifts Defeated Without Debate.

BETTING BILLS PASSED

Also Public Service Commissions Bill, Consolidated Railroad Law, and Water Storage Resolution.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 19.—In the usual rush of the closing days of the session the Senate cleared its calendar to-day of several of the most important bills of the year. Without debate it voted down the bill to provide funds needed in connection with the acceptance of the gifts of land and money for a Hudson River park, and passed the Public Service Commissions bill, the Consolidated Railroad law, the Callan Automobile bill, and the Merritt Constitutional amendment to permit the storage of water on State lands in the Adirondacks. It also passed two more of the Agnew-Perkins bills, designed to perfect the anti-betting law.

Senator Bayne, who is in charge of the Hudson River Park legislation, thinks the bill defeated to-day may yet be passed on reconsideration. It permits the State to issue bonds to the amount of $2,500,000 to complete the park. Under the Constitution, the bill must secure thirty-four votes and must be submitted to the people at the polls for approval. Should the Senate refuse to reverse itself, the project is killed, at least for the present.

In addition to 10,000 acres given by Mrs. E. H. Harriman was a gift of $1,000,000, also from Mrs. Harriman, to purchase more land. J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, and others who have country places along the Hudson had contributed to a fund aggregating $1,000,000, to be used in the development of the park.

"I cannot understand the action of the Senate to-day," said Senator Bayne to-night. "I never suspected any opposition and no one spoke against the plan. Technically, the whole project is dead now. I cannot believe that the Senators will repeat their votes when they thoroughly understand the importance of the scheme. I believe many of them voted to-day without understanding what was involved."

An emergency message was obtained from Gov. Hughes to pass the Callan Automobile bill out of its order. There was no dissenting vote. It requires the annual registration of automobiles at a fee varying according to horse power.

Owing to amendments, the bill must be returned to the Assembly for concurrence, but as the original bill was passed by a large majority in the lower house, it is expected that there will be no further trouble in sending the bill to the Governor.

The Public Service Commission's bill passed without the amendments affecting rates and capitalization, which were first adopted and then stricken out again last week. The measure retains the amendment providing for the regulation of commutation and mileage rates.

The consolidated railroad law, which was passed to-day, is one of the series of general laws presented last year by the State Revision Commission. Because it contained a section of an old law which provided that the Legislature could not reduce fares unless the corporation affected was earning 10 per cent. Gov. Hughes vetoed the measure last year. As passed to-day the bill does not contain this provision.

Senator Grattan made a fight against the betting bills, but could muster only thirteen votes. One of the measures passed to-day prohibits the advertising or publication of race betting odds if such acts facilitate bookmaking or pool selling. Senator Agnew said the bill had been amended so that odds on races could be published as a matter of news. The other gambling bill passed to-day provides that the officers of a racing association which keeps a room, or any inclosure or place to be used for gambling, are guilty of a misdemeanor. As the bill was passed by the Assembly, the prohibition was against gambling done with the consent or knowledge of the officers. This qualification is cut out of the bill which was passed to-day.

There was only one vote in the Senate against the Merritt amendment to the Constitution permitting water storage in the forest preserve. Senator Agnew asked if the societies for the protection of the Adirondacks were in favor of the plan. Senator Coats explained that the resolution had been amended at the suggestion of those who opposed it in the original form. Senator Agnew was not convinced, and he voted against it. The amendment must be passed by another Legislature before it can be submitted to the people for approval.

The Senate virtually killed the Mackenzie bill, directed against the pollution of the rivers and other streams of the State. It got only nine votes. The vote was reconsidered and the bill was recommitted.

The Senate reversed its previous action and passed the bill permitting State banks to sell time certificates of deposit.

ARRESTED AS SWINDLERS.

Starkloff and Post Alleged Members of "Red" Adams Gang.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—Accused of having been associated with "Red" Adams in the notorious gold brick swindle by which several titled Europeans were defrauded of large sums and of having used the mails to defraud many people in this country in a "green goods" game, E. A. Starkloff and George W. Post were arrested here to-day by Postal Inspector Cortelyou and his assistants.

Adams was arrested last April in New York and is now serving a four-and-a-half-year sentence in the Atlanta Federal prison.

The men arrested to-day have been living in fine homes at Wynnwood, a fashionable suburb, where they took a prominent part in church work and social activities. Starkloff, according to the authorities, was also known as Frank Morris and A. B. Cline. It is alleged that he was arrested in Detroit on May 5, but jumped his bail. It is also said that he was sentenced for a similar offense at Albany, N. Y., in 1892. He was held in $3,000 at a hearing to-day by Commissioner Craig. Post, who was held in $2,000 bail, was never before arrested, but the postal authorities say they have been on his trail for several years.

The scheme for which they are now under arrest consisted in writing to various persons, saying that they had stolen a die from the United States Mint, which would make money that even the Inspectors could not tell from the real, and offering to sell $1,500 of it for $500.

Walter C. Mayer, Chief Postal Inspector, admitted last night that both men were known as friends and companions of "Red" Adams.

Charles D. Adams, which is "Red" Adams's real name, is known as an old-time confidence man, who in his long career has swindled his dupes out of probably $250,000. He was arrested last on Dec. 22, 1909, charged with operating a variation of the old "Spanish prisoner" trick. Most of his dupes were wealthy Englishmen. He was convicted on Feb. 28 before Judge Hough in the United States District Court.

No Pipe Galleries in New Subway Plans

The Public Service Commission has notified the Board of Estimate of its decision to leave plans for pipe galleries out of the Broadway-Lexington Avenue Subway. The space for the construction of the galleries is included in the plans, but in order to facilitate speedy construction the commission does not contemplate installing the galleries themselves when the [illegible]

GAYNOR FOR 2-CENT FARE

As One of the Ways to Relieve the City's Congestion.

Mayor Gaynor addressed the members of his Commission on Congestion of Population at their first meeting yesterday at City Hall. Among other things he suggested that some arrangement might be made by which the Interborough Rapid Transit Company would carry passengers downtown on the empty trains which it runs on the Subway and elevated lines to meet the rush traffic at a two-cent fare.

"Let's see," said the Mayor after greeting the new Commissioners, "what is the population of the whole world? If I am not mistaken it is in round numbers 1,500,000,000. It is true, however, that they could all be put in the City of New York each occupying two feet square. Yes, and they could all be put in the State of Texas, six to the acre. And yet here we are with the question of congestion of population. What a strange world this is. I say all this is subject to correction, especially in the presence of Prof. Goodnow, whose fine book on Municipal Government I read the other night.

"If the Interborough and the elevated companies would carry passengers in the morning trains which run empty to the Bronx, and then carry them back in the evening trains which run empty to the bridge at 2 cents, say, they could carry all the east side and congested people up to the Bronx any day and back and make money out of it at 2 cents apiece. They would be just that much more in at the end of the year. But what is the use of talking about all these things? I hope you will do your work well, and we will talk about that afterward."

Ex-Borough President Jacob A. Cantor was elected Chairman of the commission, and preliminary plans were talked over.

MAYOR FOR OLD-TIME FOURTH

Tells Merchants' Association It Would Revive Spirit of Americanism.

Mayor Gaynor expressed himself again yesterday as in favor of an old-fashioned Fourth of July celebration in the city this year. He sent this letter on the subject to S. C. Mead, Secretary of the Merchants' Association:

Office of the Mayor,
May 19, 1910.

Dear Mr. Mead: I have received many letters expressing a wish to see a real, old-time, celebration of Independence Day in this city this year, with a view to the revival of the spirit of Americanism, and now comes your letter conveying to me the same wish of the Merchants' Association. I have an exceeding strong wish to see such a celebration, and write this to you to ascertain public opinion on the subject. We shall find it running high, if many of us are not much mistaken. The Board of Aldermen have already passed a resolution for such a citizens' celebration.

We can have a grand parade made up of our National Guard, contingents from the United States Army and Navy, from the Police and Fire Departments, and also of all civic, patriotic, historic, charitable, and industrial organizations which will join in. It may be the school boys and girls of suitable age may also participate. And at night we could, it may be, have a grand display of fireworks. The Mayor will be glad to appoint a committee of citizens to carry out the project, as you suggest, if the public desire it. Very truly yours,

W. J. GAYNOR.

S. C. Mead, Esq.,
Secretary Merchants' Association, New York.

A committee of citizens, which included Dr. Luther H. Gulick, Gen. George W. Wingate, James E. Sullivan, Chairman of the Committee on Athletics of the Board of Education, and F. Hammer of the Sage Foundation, called upon the Mayor yesterday and talked over tentative plans for the celebration with him.

ROOM FOR MORE AT PRINCETON

New Buildings on the Campus Will Accommodate 150 Freshmen.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 19.—The announcement was made to-day at the office of Andrew C. Imbrie, Financial Secretary of Princeton University, that accommodations for an additional 150 freshmen will be provided on the campus next Fall through the completion this week of the new dormitories donated by Mrs. Russell Sage, and the adjacent entries given by the classes of '81, '85, and other alumni. This will bring the total number of students rooming on the campus up to 1,100, the total enrollment now being 1,283.

When the new dormitories were first planned it was intended that they should be used exclusively by freshmen. It was later decided, however, that the general plan followed at Princeton University of intermingling the members of the four classes as much as possible should be in force here, too. So with the consent of the donors of the new buildings the incoming freshmen will be distributed among the various dormitories on the campus.

NO DAMAGES FOR STRONG MAN

Wrestler Said Trolley Accident Kept Him from Being Champion.

Anthony Kandrathe of 119 South First Street, Brooklyn, a professional strong man, failed in his suit for $25,000 damages against the Brooklyn Heights Railroad for injuries suffered when he was struck by a car at Greenpoint and Kingsland Avenues, Brooklyn, on the night of Sept. 25, 1906. The accident occurred the night following Kandrathe's marriage, while he and his bride were driving. The car ran into his carriage.

He declared that injuries to his shoulder and back prevented him from becoming the champion wrestler of the world. While under cross-examination he admitted that a week ago he took part in a wrestling match at the Clermont Rink in Brooklyn, where the wrestler of the evening threw the Terrible Turk, but was unable to throw him.

Heavy Sentence for Cocaine Seller.

Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions imposed the severest sentence yesterday ever handed out under the Cocaine act in this city. The prisoner was "Doc" Lewis, an old offender in the traffic along Seventh Avenue. He got a sentence for two years in the State Prison. It was his fourth arrest, and his second conviction. In a few days the new law, which makes it a crime to have cocaine in one's possession without a doctor's certificate, will go into effect.

Girl Law Students Hear a Court Case.

Fifteen young women were interested spectators yesterday at the trial of an accident case in the Supreme Court. They were members of a law class in the Jessica G. Finch School in West Seventy-second Street. Supreme Court Justice Blanchard ordered that the court attendants show the party every courtesy. Other young women members of the same class will hear a Supreme Court case to-day.

SENATORS ENRAGED OVER GRAFT INQUIRY

Republican Leader Cobb Resents Reference by Hinman to "Weaklings and Crooks."

CHANGE OF PLAN ASSAILED

Assembly Amendments to Resolution Also Denounced as Attempted Fraud on the Public.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 19.—Trouble and lots of it is brewing at the Capitol as a result of the attempt of the legislative leaders closely affiliated with the Republican machine to squelch or divert from its original purpose the investigation of graft in the Legislature, recommended by Gov. Hughes. The open outbreak occurred in the Senate to-day, when Senator Hinman indulged in so much plain talk on the subject that his speech brought Majority Leader Cobb to his feet with a sharp retort.

The Hinman-Cobb episode grew out of the amendment, recently inserted into the graft inquiry resolution, now pending before the upper house, broadening the scope of the proposed inquiry, so as to load the committee down with an investigation or industrial insurance in addition to its original task of looking into the many charges of legislative corruption developed at the Allds trial and in the Hotchkiss fire insurance investigation.

Senator Hinman, when he first learned of this amendment, insisted that it should be taken out of the resolution on the ground that it would divert the proposed investigation from the multifarious trails of legislative corruption that have been laid bare through the inquiries that have preceded it. Senator Hinman said at that time that he was heartily in favor of investigating industrial insurance, but that it ought to be done through some other agency than the proposed committee to investigate legislative graft.

Common report at the Capitol has it that the industrial insurance amendment was put in through the efforts of the agents here of one of the big insurance companies, which, after the Armstrong investigation, were limited in the matter of new business to $150,000,000 a year, while such concerns as the Metropolitan and the Prudential, dealing in industrial insurance, have added to their business annually from $450,000,000 to $500,000,000 without check or hindrance by law. From the point of view of the other life insurance companies an investigation of the industrial concerns would be a means of checking their growth, and incidentally would benefit the former in their business.

As part of the campaign conducted by the life insurance lobby stories have been sent broadcast over the State through a certain news agency since Senator Hinman entered his first protest denouncing not only him, but Gov. Hughes and Supt. Hotchkiss, as the allies of the industrial insurance concerns. It was such an article in a Western New York paper that stirred Senator Hinman to action to-day, and it was to this part of the inspired article that he took exception:

Legislators are wondering what mysterious hold the Metropolitan Life and other industrial companies throughout the State have on Gov. Hughes and his two leading satellites, Superintendent of Insurance William H. Hotchkiss and Senator Harvey D. Hinman.

From the beginning of his career as an insurance inquisitor, Gov. Hughes has protected the industrial companies. As attorney for the Armstrong Insurance Committee, Charles E. Hughes declined to investigate the Metropolitan Life.

Hotchkiss, since he took office, has made an especial pet of industrial insurance, and has let those companies conspicuously alone while he exposed the graft and corruption in other branches.

Senator Hinman, rising to a question of high personal privilege in the Senate to-day, denounced the allegations as false. He freely admitted that he was counsel for the Security Mutual Company of Binghamton, but declared that that concern was not writing industrial insurance.

In his speech Senator Hinman said:

"I want to say that we cannot sit here like weaklings or act like crooks without the people knowing about what we do and forming their opinion on it, and if the newspapers report what we do rather than what we think we do, they ought not to be called muckrakers."

Taking up the present phraseology of the graft resolution, Senator Hinman said that the clause which demanded the filing of charges "verified on knowledge" to enable the committee to investigate them would be enough to mar all prospect of thorough work.

"A member of the Senate not long ago verified a charge against another member on knowledge," said Senator Hinman, "and as a result was compelled to resign from the Senate. It is unlikely that this will prove an incentive to others to follow his example. Knowledge of a corrupt act generally implies complicity."

"The real story is this. A whole lot of stuff has been thrown in here as a subterfuge to blind the people. There is not a thing in the resolution that hasn't been monkeyed with. The whole thing bears the earmarks of fraudulent intent, and when I protest I am charged with conspiring with Gov. Hughes and the Insurance Superintendent to protect an insurance company. I cannot permit this thing to go unanswered."

When Senator Hinman took his seat Majority Leader Cobb sprang to his feet. In a frenzy of anger he shook his fist at his colleague and shouted:

"I will not allow any man to criticise me in that way, and if you are a man you will apologize. You know that I and every Senator here have acted in good faith in connection with this resolution. I resent it as an insult, and so should every honest man in this chamber when he says we sit here as weaklings and crooks."

Senator Hinman said he was sorry if anybody felt that he had charged the members with being crooks, as he had no such intent.

Supt. Hotchkiss declined to make any comment on the Senate episode or to take any notice of the allegations made against him.

Late this afternoon Senator Cobb introduced a resolution limiting each Senator to one five-minute speech on any proposition coming before the upper house from now until final adjournment.

The Senate Finance Committee met to-night to wrestle with the graft investigation resolution and whip it into shape to report to the Senate.

When the Finance Committee adjourned shortly before midnight, Chairman Hill and all of the members declined to state what had been done with reference to the investigation resolution.

Tea Time Talks

Hill-Grown Tea

Tea growing is a fine art. The quality of tea depends on the elevation of the land and the nature of the soil. In Ceylon, where "Salada" Tea is grown, great care is given to the cultivation of the tea plant as an industry, just as we cultivate apples in Oregon. That is why Ceylon Tea is the finest in the world.

"Salada" Tea is grown at an altitude of over 5,000 feet. After the leaves are once picked they never touch human hands, but are packed by machinery in hermetically sealed lead packages which retain the fragrance and flavor.

Bulk tea, being open to the air, invariably loses its flavor.

Yearly Sales Over 20,000,000 Packages

Ask your grocer for a ten cent trial package of "Salada" Ceylon Tea. It makes 40 cups. If for any reason your grocer cannot supply you, send us his name and address and we will deliver a trial package to you Free. Our pamphlet, "The Healthfulness of Tea," is mailed Free.

DE CRESPIGNY DIED TO SAVE A WOMAN

Suicide Had Been Named as Co-respondent in a Divorce Suit.

RESPONDENT AN AMERICAN

Story Hushed Up at Inquest on British Captain, and Verdict of Suicide While Temporarily Insane Is Returned.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 19.—Behind the death of Capt. Claude Champion De Crespigny, who committed suicide yesterday, is a story of infatuation for a prominent young American woman, who, since her marriage two years ago, has been living here, where she is well known and extremely popular.

For some time past there had been a good deal of gossip concerning the evident strong attachment between the unfortunate officer and the young woman in question, the culmination being reached a few days since, when Capt. Champion De Crespigny is understood to have been served with papers in a divorce suit brought by the husband of the woman, in which Capt. De Crespigny was named as co-respondent. The latter was a man of highly strung temperament and took the matter very much to heart, and it is supposed that he believed the only possible chance to save the woman's name and honor was to commit suicide.

There was some belief that the whole story would come out at the inquest, which was held to-night at Kingscliffe, but this was not the case. The jury's verdict was that the deceased shot himself while temporarily insane.

A physician testified that the Captain had suffered from influenza, which was very likely a cause of mental derangement.

Sir Claude Champion De Crespigny, the father, said his son had suffered many severe falls in steeplechasing and polo, which might have caused temporary insanity. So far as he knew his son had nothing to trouble him. There had been no quarrels or family discord.

The Coroner, in summing up, said he felt confident that the shooting was a result of temporary derangement, explainable by illness, and especially by the deceased's influenza, falls, and wounds.

FRENCH ATTACK OUR SAILORS.

American Stabbed at Toulon—One Frenchman Arrested.

TOULON, May 19.—Three sailors from the American cruiser New York, while returning to their vessel early to-day, had an encounter with three Fench sailos.

One of the Americans, named Adams, received a stab wound in the hip, but was not dangerously wounded. His companions, named Eccles and Radder, suffered less.

The Frenchmen were put to flight and later one of them was arrested and put in jail. The police are searching for the others.

STEAMER BURNED AT SEA.

The J. Marhoffer Destroyed Off Oregon Coast—19 Passengers Land.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.—The steamer J. Marhoffer, which left San Francisco for Portland, Ore., on May 14, has been burned at sea twenty miles north of Newport, Ore.

Capt. Wellander of the United States Life Saving Station reports that nineteen persons from the burned steamer, including the Captain and his wife, have landed safely in their own boats.

MOURMELON-LE-GRAND, May 19.—M. Scheurt flew in a biplane with a passenger to Chalons-sur-Marne and return, a total distance of about thirty miles, to-day, at a speed of 46½ miles an hour.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

SOUTHAMPTON, May 19.—The steamer Kroonland, which put in here for repairs on Monday, sailed to-day for New York. Her first-class passengers were transferred yesterday to the Adriatic.

SEUL, May 19.—Yie Chaim Yong, the Korean who stabbed Premier Yi in an attempt at assassination last Dec. 22, was to-day sentenced to death.

TOKIO, May 19.—The Privy Council to-day adopted a convention for the protection of copyrights.

THE VENUS DISAPPEARS.

Irias Probably Disgusted Because He Must Not Shell Bluefields.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The steamer Venus, transformed into a warship by President Madriz, which sailed into the Harbor of Bluefields with the announced purpose of bombarding that place, has disappeared. Commander Gilmer of the U. S. S. Paducah, which with the Dubuque is lying in the Harbor of Bluefields, reported the fact to-day to the State Department.

The inference is that Gen. Irias, who commanded the Venus expedition, became disgusted with the notice served upon him last Tuesday by Commander Gilmer that he would not be permitted to bombard Bluefields, and withdrew.

Naval precedents show that Commander Gilmer, in forbidding the bambardment of an unprotected town, did exactly as other commanders have done in the past, and as Capt. Dillingham did in the case of Santo Domingo about five years ago when he told the combatants that they might go outside the town limits and fight as much as they pleased, but they could not jeopardize the lives of women and children and non-combatants within the city.

A conflict at Bluefields between the Government and the Estrada forces is imminent, according to advices received to-day by the Navy Department from Commander Gilmer. He says the forces of the Estrada faction are only three miles from Bluefields, and that an engagement may be expected at any time. He reports having landed a hundred men to protect American lives and property.

ROOSEVELT PARADE GROWS.

Whole Philadelphia Organization Decides to Fall in Line.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chairman of the Roosevelt Reception Committee, announced yesterday many changes in the plans for welcoming Col. Roosevelt on Saturday, June 18. They involve the elimination of the land parade, which, it was first calculated, would take five or six hours to pass a given point.

The decision to give up this important feature was forced, according to Mr. Vanderbilt, by the fact that the parade would necessarily become unwieldy from its size. Within the last three weeks the committee has been almost overwhelmed by applications from organizations in this city and throughout the country, even to the Pacific Coast, for places in the parade.

A single nationality in this city assured Capt. Cosby, Secretary of the committee, that there would be 10,000 of its men in line if permitted to march. It was certain, Capt. Cosby found in going over the applications received that not less than 30,000 men would parade if allowed.

When this was reported to the Executive Committee it was at once stated that such a parade would be out of keeping with the original determination to have the celebration simple and dignified, at the same time permitting as many people as possible to participate.

It is now decided to have a parade from the Battery consisting of only the mounted police, the police band, the Rough Riders as escort of honor, and ex-President Roosevelt and the Reception Committee in carriages.

All other organizations will be assigned positions on either side of Fifth Avenue, as many as possible below Twenty-third Street.

Mr. Vanderbilt was able yesterday also to state definitely the plans for receiving Col. Roosevelt at Quarantine. He said the Reception Committee of 300 would assemble at the Battery on Saturday morning, June 18, not later than 8 o'clock. The committee will then proceed to Quarantine on a revenue cutter. As soon as the ex-President is transferred from the Hamburg-American liner Auguste Victoria to the revenue cutter this boat will head the naval parade.

This procession of craft of all kinds will proceed up the North River on the west side to a point about opposite Twenty-third Street, when it will circle to the east side of the river and steam down to Pier A at the Battery. There Mayor Gaynor and Col. Roosevelt will deliver addresses.

REPUBLICANS' PLANS.

County Committee to Welcome Roosevelt—For Track Removal.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Republican County Committee last night, a resolution was passed authorizing Chairman Lloyd C. Griscom to appoint a committee of nine members to represent the organization at the reception to Col. Roosevelt upon his arrival in this city on June 18.

Collin H. Woodward, Vice-Chairman of the committee, presided in the absence of Mr. Griscom, who is out of town.

A resolution was passed requesting the Corporation Counsel to appeal from the decision of Referee D Cady Herrick in the Eleventh Avenue track case, and urging him to take all possible steps to bring about the removal of the tracks from grade.

Resolutions were adopted on the death of Ferdinand Eidman, who was the Republican leader of the Tenth Assembly District and the Collector of Internal Revenue for the Third District.

ROOT TO MEET ROOSEVELT.

Senator Is Commissioner to The Hague but Will Join the Colonel Abroad.

Senator Root will sail for Europe to-morrow. He goes abroad as one of the American Commissioners in the Newfoundland fisheries dispute at The Hague. Before leaving Washington for New York yesterday afternoon he spent an hour with President Taft. He said that his call was simply a farewell, and had nothing to do with legislation.

The significance of Senator Root's visit is that he will meet Col. Roosevelt abroad and doubtless have a long talk with him concerning the Taft Administration. Senator Root is on intimate terms with both the President and Col. Roosevelt, and it is likely his views will have great weight with the former President.

BOND FOR AERONAUT'S WIFE.

Mrs. Forbes Ignored Judgment for Alienating Chauffeur's Affections.

BRIDEGPORT, Conn., May 19.—Mrs. Jessie Livingston Forbes, wife of A. Holland Forbes, the aeronaut, was taken to the county jail to-day because she had not satisfied a judgment of $3,750 and costs in favor of Mrs. Ida Rowley of New York. Mr. Forbes, who returned from Kentucky last night, gave a bond of $5,000, upon which his wife was released, but she is confined to the jail limits—that is, to the City of Bridgeport.

The judgment was obtained by Mrs. Rowley after a suit in the Superior Court in which alienation of the affections of her husband, Ernest Rowley, chauffeur for Mrs. Forbes, was alleged. The suit was for $75,000 damages, and Mrs. Forbes made no defense.

STANDARD OIL RAISES PAY.

General Advance Swells Payrolls from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 a Year.

The Standard Oil Company, which like the United States Steel Corporation makes a practice of voluntarily increasing the wages of its men as conditions warrant, has announced a general advance in the wages of its factory forces of from 6 to 10 per cent., effective from the first of the current month.

It was estimated in Wall Street yesterday that the advance would add from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 annually to the company's pay rolls, although nothing official could be obtained from the company on the subject. Standard Oil like United States Steel is practically independent of labor organizations. It has never had a strike.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 19.—A surprise at the opening session of the Presbyterian General Assembly to-day was the election of the Rev. Dr. Charles Little, pastor of the Wabash Presbyterian Church of Wabash, Ind., as Moderator.

Perhaps the most surprised man among the 900 Commissioners was Dr. Little himself, who had earnestly urged his friends not to present his name. He was elected on the third ballot by a vote of 476 to the Rev. Dr. George Alexander's 319. Dr. Alexander is the pastor of University Place Church, New York, and his election had been expected.

At the close of the third ballot, Dr. Alexander made a motion that Dr. Little be elected Moderator by a unanimous vote. This was carried with a cheer. Other candidates were Prof. Andrew C. Zenos of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, and the Rev. Dr. Ethelbert D. Warfield, President of the Lafayette College.

Dr. Little probably owed his election to the announcement that Indiana had not had a Moderator in fifty years. He has been pastor of the Wabash Church for forty years, and Stated Clerk of the Synod of Indiana for twenty years. He is the son of a preacher, the father of a preacher, and six of his brothers are preachers. For two or three generations the Littles have been "pioneer preachers" in the Middle West.

The assembly holds its sessions in the Music Hall of the steel pier, 1,750 feet from the boardwalk. It is handsomely decorated with National colors for the entertainment of the highest legislative body of the Presbyterian Church.

From 8 o'clock in the morning until 11 the commissioners thronged the pier, renewing acquaintanceships of former years and discussing the important business which the assembly is expected to transact. Many of the commissioners attended the pre-assembly evangelistic conferences which the Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has been directing.

Among the 940 commissioners were two Japanese and four full-blooded Indians. From Alaska came the Rev. Edward Marsden of Sakman, a Tsimpsian Indian, who is devoting his life to teaching the Gospel to his race. He is a graduate of Marietta College and Maine Theological Seminary. George Whitfield of Washington State, is another Indian commissioner.

An interesting family reunion took place when three brothers, all of whom are in the ministry and who had not met for years, clasped hands. All three are commissioners to the assembly. The Rev. Hugh Montgomery comes from Kalamazoo, Mich.; the Rev. S. T. Montgomery from Los Angeles, and the Rev. D. R. Montgomery from Cle Elum, Wash. There is a fourth brother, also a minister, who lives in Pittsburg.

A matter of pressing interest is the "New York Presbytery case." This is now before the Judicial Commission. The case concerns three students of Union Theological Seminary, Messrs. Black, Steen, and Fitch, who were licensed to preach by the New York Presbytery. Should the Judicial Commission refer the case to the Assembly, a memorable debate will ensue.

The decision of Dr. Little as to the personnel of the Committee on Judicial Business, to be appointed to-morrow, will decide the fate of the appeal of the minority members of the New York Presbytery, who seek to uphold their charge of heresy against Messrs. Black, Steen, and Fitch, who are accused of having refused to accept the belief of the immaculate conception during their examination for the ministry.

Should the new committee decide in favor of hearing the appeal the matter will be referred to the permanent judicial commission, whose Chairman is appointed by the Moderator. This commission met in secret to-night.

NO LAY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN.

Southern Methodist Church's General Conference Votes Against It.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 19.—At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to-day the matter of increased representation of laymen in annual Conference, which was acted upon yesterday, was reconsigned on the ground that the measure could not be changed without a two-thirds vote of this Conference and a three-fourths vote of annual Conferences. The old law pertaining to lay representation, therefore, still is in effect.

The movement for women laity rights also suffered defeat. Dr. N. B. Henry of the St. Louis Conference spoke in favor of it, and Miss Belle Bennet, Secretary of the Women's Home Mission Society, was by resolution invited to address the Conference, and accepted, making the first time a woman has ever spoken on the floor of a General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

On a vote, however, the minority report in the women's favor was lost by 74 to 188.

OIL-BURNING LINER TRIAL.

Successful Trip of the Metropolitan Liner Yale to Ambrose Lightship.

The first oil-burning passenger vessel to sail from this port, and the first turbine vessel anywhere to use oil as fuel went down to the Ambrose Channel Lightship yesterday to demonstrate to friends, engineers, and shipping men that the fuel has come to supplant coal as a steam generator.

The oil burner is the Metropolitan liner Yale. Her officers say that the trip was highly successful, and that at any rate one great problem is solved, the supply of labor for the stoke hold. The Yale left her pier and went to the open sea with only six men keeping steam up. With coal she would have required forty-eight men shoveling and trimming coal.

The Yale, under Capt. Thomas B. Hawes, cast off from Pier 9, North River, shortly before noon. Before she put clear she ran foul of a string of coal-barges ahead and a tug towing a schooner astern. So her skipper had to hold her against the tide while the barges passed ahead, a feat of navigation which won applause from those aboard her. After getting free the Yale headed down the bay. No attempt at speed was made, but she went along at about an average of 17 knots with occasional bursts of 24 knots at an expenditure of 1,000 gallons of oil an hour. According to Robert MacGregor, consulting engineer, the engines under oil fuel developed some 8,000 horse power.

Down in the heat of her engine room the force of men was working apparently with little expenditure of energy. They kept the oil supply running freely and the tanks filled, while the Yale met every demand made upon her. All they had to do was to keep the oil burners under each of the big boilers going. It was a touch of the valve here and an increase of the supply of oil there to keep up the terrific heat so as to give a steady pressure on the turbines.

The ease with which the oil is handled is one of the points in its favor. When the barge is alongside a connection is made with a 6-inch hose to the intake pipe on the main deck. The oil is transferred direct into the double bottom of the vessel. From there it is pumped by special suction pumps into two large tanks, each having a capacity of 6,000 gallons. This quantity is sufficient to keep the vessel going at top speed for four hours.

From the tanks the oil is forced by duplex pumps through a series of filters and meters into the 3-inch main supply pipe. This pipe branches off into smaller pipes, which convey the oil to the individual burners. There are thirty-six burners on the Yale, three under each of the twelve boilers. The capacity of the double bottom set apart for oil fuel is 100,000 gallons.

The guests were taken to the engine room, where they had a chance to see the oil sprays burning fiercely under each boiler, and the small but alert force standing by each valve. Consulting Engineer MacGregor explained how the fires were fed and the advantages of oil as fuel. It is claimed that not only does oil solve the labor problem, but it is more cleanly and maintains a steadier pressure than coal, which means a better maintained schedule of time from port to port.

The system adopted on the Yale is the Lassoe fuel oil burning system, and was installed by W. & A. Fletcher Company of Hoboken, N. J.

Among those who made the trip were D. M. Addison, Lieuts. W. Norris and T. W. Lentze of the United States Navy, A. S. Hebble, C. L. Halenbeck, D. E. Ford, and Henry Fisher of the Standard Oil Company; William Fletcher, Andrew Fletcher, H. L. Bridgman, F. V. Lassoe, H. C. Nickerson, Superintendent of the Fall River Line; C. M. Mellen, J. W. Millard, Stevenson Taylor, Charles S. Lee, Calvin Austin, President of the Metropolitan Steamship Company; C. W. Sterling, freight agent, and C. H. Taylor, general passenger agent of that line.

SUSPICIOUS NAVY YARD FIRE.

Blaze Near a Magazine Thought to Have Been Incendiary.

The authorities of the Brooklyn Navy Yard are investigating a fire which started in the Marine Barracks there on Wednesday afternoon and threatened to cause an explosion of the magazine in the building. There is a belief in the yard that an attempt was made by some person whose identity is not known there to blow up the building. The blaze started on the second floor, just above the magazine. It was discovered and put out before it gained any headway.

This was the fourth unexplained fire in the Marine Barracks within a month. They caused no serious damage, but they gave the authorities much worry. Several marines have deserted of late, but none of these is suspected. Early one morning about two weeks ago a sentry saw a man in civilian clothes crossing the campus and called upon the stranger to halt. The man ran and escaped from the yard after the sentry fired a shot at him. A special guard has been put over the magazine.

LAWLER HAD GRUDGE AGAINST L. R. GLAVIS

Writer of Draft of Taft's Letter Admits ex-Land Agent Once Had Him Investigated.

CALLED HIM INCOMPETENT

Assistant Attorney General Adds That He Was Vindicated and in Writing Draft Was Unprejudiced.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Oscar Lawler, Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department, who wrote the now famous Lawler memorandum "as if he were President," had at that time, according to developments before the Ballinger Investigating Committee to-day, a long standing grudge against Glavis because the latter had once charged him with incompetency. Mr. Lawler insisted, however, that this fact did not in any way affect his decision, which was based upon the records in the case, and that he was prejudiced only as "one may be prejudiced in favor of an honest man and against a dishonest one."

Mr. Lawler's attitude upon the witness stand to-day while he was under cross-examination by Attorney Brandeis, was quite different from his demeanor on Tuesday. He had no clashes with counsel, but for the most part kept his eyes firmly fixed upon the table before him when replying to questions. Mr. Brandeis led carefully up to the point where the ill-feeling between Lawler and Glavis began some three years ago. He induced Mr. Lawler to say that he "fully realized the responsibility" placed upon him by the President in requesting him to prepare the memorandum.

Mr. Lawler said he had entered upon the duty in a judicial manner, and he declared that the confidence which he had in Secretary Ballinger and his subordinates did not influence him in his action, his course being guided solely by the records in the case. He was asked why it was that he had considered certain documents in the case and had omitted to call attention to others, notably the two reports adverse to the Cunningham claims, which were in the office at the time Ballinger clear-listed those claims. Mr. Lawler replied that he thought he had included everything material. Although he at first said he had made no charges against Glavis except insubordination, he afterward admitted he had accused him of untruthfulness, neglect of duty, and unnecessary delay in concluding the Cunningham cases, and that Glavis had had no opportunity to make any answer to these charges.

Glavis Accused Lawler.

Mr. Brandeis then wanted to know what his acquaintance had been with Glavis, to which the witness said he had only seen him once, and then not to speak with him. To an inquiry on the part of members of the committee as to what that had to do with the matter, Mr. Lawler volunteered the statement that he knew what counsel was "driving at." He went on to say that while he had been United States District Attorney in Southern California and Glavis was in charge of the Land Office at Oakland, a subordinate of Glavis, with the latter's approval, had made charges against him, alleging that he was not competent to try a certain land case. These charges went up to the Attorney General, were dismissed, Lawler was exonerated, and, according to his statement, the defendants were convicted.

Mr. Brandeis asked that the record in the case be produced. He wanted, he said, to show that Lawler had prosecuted certain defendants and had "failed to prosecute others." Immediately there was a pronounced objection on the part of Senator Sutherland, Representative Denby, and other members of the committee.

Mr. Brandeis said he desired to show that Lawler had a prejudice against Mr. Glavis at the time he wrote his letter, and that Secretary Ballinger was fully aware of that prejudice when he took Lawler to Beverley with him, and he was selected as the man to write the opinion in the matter of the charges against him. A wrangle ensued among members of the committee, which resulted in Representative Madison, insurgent Republican, saying that it might be assumed that Ballinger knew of the Lawler-Glavis controversy and that it would not be necessary to "lumber" up the record with the papers in that case.

On that view of the matter, Mr. Brandeis withdrew his request, although other Republican members of the committee dissented from Mr. Madison's view, and, notwithstanding the fact that the request was withdrawn, Senator Sutherland insisted that the committee should vote on the motion not to call for these papers. All of the Republicans, except Madison voted that way, while he and the Democrats simply answered "Present," stating their reasons to be that there was nothing to vote upon inasmuch as the request for the papers had been withdrawn.

Fred Dennett, Commissioner of the General Land Office, was recalled after Lawler was dismissed. In cross-examining Mr. Dennett it was brought out that the special agents of the Interior Department had been employed to do "detective work", in the effort to connect forest service officials with the preparation of Glavis's affidavit and in running down magazine writers who had assailed the department. Mr. Dennett made a satisfactory witness for the "defense," was always good-natured and frank in his answers, and there was at no time the semblance of a clash between him and counsel.

Attempt to Show Conspiracy.

E. T. Perkins, in charge of the Chicago office of the Reclamation Service, was the only other witness of the day. Mr. Perkins is the man who was mentioned by Chief Engineer Davis of the Reclamation Service as having had charge of the "black tent" campaign, and was charged with having received pay from the railroads while lecturing upon reclamation projects.

Perkins related a conversation alleged to have taken place in Chicago on Oct. 29 last with F. H. Newell, Director of the Reclamation Service, whom, it has been alleged, Secretary Ballinger intended to supplant with R. H. Thomson of Seattle. According to Perkins, Newell said: "You should not try to vindicate Ballinger in the 'black tent' matter. I want to make Ballinger the 'goat.'"

Perkins said his answer was:

"You can't do it; he's too big a man."

To which the witness said Newell replied:

"Never mind; I am going to do it anyhow."

Perkins also told of attending at the request of Gifford Pinchot a conference at the home of ex-Secretary Garfield in West Mentor, Ohio, on July 18. He said that Pinchot, Garfield, and Thomas R. Shipp of the Conservation Society were present at the conference, the purpose of which was to insure the retention of Newell in office. Perkins said he had promised to work for Newell, and had done so to the extent of inducing a number of railroad officials to write to Ballinger in Newell's behalf.

Attorney Vertrees introduced a number of letters and telegrams written by Shipp and Garfield regarding a trip "our friend," (who, Perkins said, was Pinchot,) was to make to Washington to see Newell. The evident purpose of the "defense" was to show through the testimony of Perkins and these documents that the conspiracy which the "defense" charges exists against Ballinger had its beginning at the home of Garfield, and that Pinchot came to Washington to try to induce Newell and other subordinates of Ballinger to participate in it.

Perkins had something, too, to say about railway rates, and declared that the roads were carrying cement, machinery, and other material for reclamation work for the Government at a loss of 10 to 20 per cent. This they did, he said, to help build up the West.

DEMOCRATS FAIL REGULARS.

Senators Balk at Signing Pledge to Vote on Amendments.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Following their partial caucus last evening the Democratic Senators to-day flatly refused to agree to a plan by which insurgent amendments to the Railroad bill would be voted on summarily without debate. This plan was Mr. Aldrich's, as announced by himself on the floor yesterday, though the paper which the Democrats refused to sign was circulated by Senator Johnston of Alabama, a Democrat. This paper also committed the minority to a motion to strike from the bill the three sections relating to stock and bond issues of Inter-State railroads.

Mr. Johnston succeeded in getting a few signatures, but the efforts of Senator Bacon of Georgia and other prominent Democrats soon put a stop to the whole movement. The weight of Democratic opinion last night had been hostile to the three sections referred to, especially when it was being commonly charged that Mr. Aldrich was making a deal with the Democrats for the humiliation of the insurgents.

The paper which the Democrats failed to sign also gave a place of advantage to the New Mexico and Arizona Statehood bill. Senators Hughes and Bailey pressed the necessity for the passage of the Statehood bill as a consideration for any concessions that might be made on the railroad measure.

The insurgents meanwhile knew of the pit Mr. Aldrich was trying to dig for them and their tempers were not improved by the knowledge. Though the bill has been discussed in the fullest detail by the insurgents, when the Railroad bill was taken up this morning Mr. Cummins started in with a speech in favor of his amendment making all increases in rates subject to the Inter-State Commerce Commission, as if the subject were entirely new. Mr. Cummins's speech lasted all day and was not concluded when adjournment was taken.

The regulars speak confidently of having enough votes to defeat the amendments, but they are evidently afraid they will lose some of them—probably the Democratic contingent. Mr. Aldrich and his colleagues are trying to get to voting as quickly as possible, but the bill will not again be taken up before Monday.

Though the regulars have announced to the President their loyal determination to stand by the stock and bond provisions of the bill, it looks now as if they may be dropped from the measure when the time comes.

ATTACKS TECHNICAL SCHOOLS

Bookwalter Tells Typothetae They Educated Away from Work, Not for It.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Charles Bookwalter, ex-Mayor of Indianapolis, speaking before the United Typothetae of America to-day on the subject of the future of Winona Technical Institute, declared that the tendency of the average American technical school was to educate boys away from work, and not toward it.

"The average American boy is getting to think it is dishonorable to work with his sleeves rolled up," Mr. Bookwalter declared. "It is almost the same way with the girls. I hope to see established at Winona a department of domestic science where girls can be prepared to marry and be able to boil lard without burning it."

When he touched on the subject of labor union influence on technical institutions he aroused the Typothetae to such a pitch of enthusiasm that it voted $3,000 to the support of Winona. "I am a union man myself, and carry a union card," said Mr. Bookwalter, "but I am not a union crank. When the labor unions wanted to dictate the education of boys at Winona I called a halt. The day when an American laborer says no boy shall have a technical education except under his direction—that day he ceases to be an American citizen."

STEEL PLANTS ASSAILED.

Labor Man Refers to Them as Slaughter Houses and Guilty of Murder.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Strong statements were made to-day concerning steel manufacturing companies in Pennsylvania by Arthur E. Holder, legislative agent of the American Federation of Labor, at a hearing before the Senate Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine in connection with the Owen bill, providing for the creation of a Department of Labor and Health.

In support of the bill he told the committee that the representatives of labor organizations during the strike at the Pressed Steel Car Works at McKees Rocks had advertised that concern as a "human slaughter house."

"A few days ago," Mr. Holder further said, "I was in the office of a Pennsylvania member of Congress and was informed that in the hospital of one of the Pennsylvania steel concerns 'willful murder was committed when it was found that it would be better for the company to have a dead man than a cripple.'"

Senator Smoot demanded the name of the concern, and his informant. Mr. Holder responded that the concern was the Bethlehem Steel Company, and he promised to supply the committee with all the facts connected with the charge.

He stated prior to this that one manufacturing concern in Ohio was reported to have "killed" 1,200 men in nine years. Senator Smoot challenged these figures, and Mr. Holder said that he had no first-hand information concerning them.

All the speakers to-day supported the measure.

"FROM THE CANNON'S MOUTH"

Chaplain's Prayer In House Makes Members Look at Speaker's Chair.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Although members of the House listen reverently to the daily prayer of its blind chaplain, the Rev. H. N. Couden, it is seldom that an invocation creates comment in the cloak rooms as did that Mr. Couden delivered to-day. Perhaps it was merely a coincidence, but the words of the chaplain following the Speaker's bitter denunciation in New York last night of the insurgents caused several members to raise their heads momentarily and look toward the Speaker's desk.

The chaplain returned thanks for "the courage which enables one to face the cannon's mouth, or resist the bayonet charge" before he went on to pray for "the higher moral courage which enables one to stand for his convictions though the whole world may oppose him, for a clear vision, right convictions, and the courage to stand for them, now, here, and always."

FOREIGN SHIPOWNERS ANGRY.

Further Denials of Alleged Attempt to Prevent Subsidy Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Further denials of the charge that there has been an attempt on the part of foreign ship owners to prevent ship subsidy legislation were made before the Special Ship Subsidy Investigation Committee to-day by Rufus Daniels and Paul Gotthell of New York, representatives of large shipping interests.

Mr. Gotthell told the committee that the foreign shipowners had maintained an attitude of neutrality, believing this to be the better course.

Mr. Daniels declared that his firm had made no attempt whatever to influence legislation with respect to ship subsidy, nor did he know of such action on the part of other shipowners of foreign countries.

LONGEVITY STORIES UNTRUE.

Census Bureau Thinks Even 110 Years Beyond Limit.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—After investigating some recently reported cases of longevity, Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur of the Census Bureau reports that "it is undoubtedly true that the age of 100 years is occasionally attained, but it is perhaps doubtful whether the age of 110 has ever been reached or exceeded."

After careful inquiry in regard to the age of Noah Raby, known as "the oldest man in the country," and said at the time of his death a few years ago to have lived 131 years and 11 months, the Census Bureau officials find that Raby was probably 92 years and 11 months old when he died, or thirty-nine years less than was claimed.

LIFE INSURANCE MEN ADOPT NEW SYSTEM

They Will Soon Assess Premiums According to Policy-Seeker's Calling and Medical History.

STUDY OF 5,000,000 CASES

Many Risks Now Refused May Be Accepted at Special Rates—Tables for 145 Classes in Preparation.

When you take out a life insurance policy in this country or in Canada a few months hence you will be asked a good many more questions than policy seekers have been asked in the past, according to a statement made last night at the dinner of the Actuarial Society of America at the Hotel Astor.

The profession or trade you have followed will, for one thing, have more to do with the amount of premium you have to pay, and you will not be so likely to be refused because your medical history is "bad." If your mother and father both died of tuberculosis, for example, you will not necessarily be refused as a risk by many of the big life insurance companies, as in the past. Two or more deaths from cancer in your family tree may not necessarily make their examiners shake their heads at you.

A different system of judging whether or not a policy seeker is a good or a bad risk is about to be adopted by all the big companies in the United States and Canada, it was learned last night from the Actuary of one of the best-known life insurance companies of this country.

People who seek policies will not all be judged alike, as, more or less, they have been judged in the past. Each man, according to his method of livelihood or the peculiarities of his family history, will be classified in a "special" way. His calling and ancestry will put him accurately and scientifically in one of about 145 "special" classes. For each of these there will be a different premium.

The healthy naval officer, for example, will pay a different premium from the healthy saloon keeper. The policy seeker who has had two deaths among his near ancestors from tuberculosis will have to pay a different premium from the policy seeker whose family shows a similar record with regard to cancer or epilepsy. Statistics for these 145 "special risks" have been quietly prepared during the past year by a committee of the chief actuaries of all the leading life insurance companies, and these form only the first step in the statistical investigation which the committee intends to carry on. Before it finishes its labors practically every common profession and every common medical history will have been studied and will have a special premium rate of its own.

The investigation, it was said last night by an actuary of the New York Life, is the greatest step toward still further reducing life insurance to an exact science that has been taken in a generation. In the work there has been co-operation between practically all the big companies of this continent, including the New York Life, the Mutual Life, the Prudential, the Phoenix Mutual, the Mutual Benefit Life, the New England Mutual, and the Metropolitan.

The actuaries on the investigating committee are Arthur Hunter of the New York Life Insurance Company, John K. Gore of the Prudential, E. E. Rose of the Mutual Benefit Life, and A. A. Welch of the Phoenix Mutual. The medical examiners of the committee are Dr. Oscar S. Rogers of the New York Life, Dr. B. Symonds of the Mutual Life, Dr. H. Williard of the Metropolitan, and Dr. Dwight of the New England Mutual.

Over 5,000,000 cases have been examined so far, according to members of the committee last night. They have been taken from the records of the companies, and represent all the risks that have been written since 1885. These 5,000,000 cases were, first of all, carefully classified by the Investigating Committee according to calling, and it was at once discovered that the chances of longevity which an army officer has is perceptibly different, for example, from those of a physician, and that the chances of long life of a saloonkeeper are also perceptibly different from those of both the other two classes, even although the typical army officer, doctor, and saloonkeeper are all healthy men.

Then the 5,000,000 cases were shaken up again and reclassified, according to their "medical history." The committee were able to figure out exactly what is the expectation of life of the average person whose father and mother has died of tuberculosis, or cancer, or epilepsy, or who is himself the victim of various ailments or suspicious symptoms.

"You can readily see what a step forward this investigation is in making life insurance an exact science, and how it will benefit policy seekers," said last night Arthur Hunter, the actuary of the New York Life Insurance Company. "As a result, many persons will be accepted by the companies who have been refused in the past. Most companies, for example, have been in the habit of refusing to issue policies to persons whose fathers and mothers have died of tuberculosis. Our committee has discovered that such persons are a fairly good risk, though exactly what premium such persons should be required to pay is a matter for the individual companies in the near future to determine.

"A similar investigation was begun eight years ago, but was lost sight of during the readjustments of the last few years. Our own investigation was suggested at a dinner of the Actuarial Society and Medical Directors of the Life Insurance Companies of America a year ago. It was thought so well of that our committee was appointed.

"All the cases of all the companies were 'pooled' for investigation. So far we have compiled statistics on only seventy types of professional and seventy-five types of medical history. But we intend to compile accurate statistics on the mortality of every common type of profession and of every common type of medical history within the next few months. Tables of special premiums for special risks will then be arranged and will be offered to the public."

The new "special risk" statistics were the principal subject of conversation at the Actuarial Society dinner at the Hotel Astor last night, at which eighty life insurance actuaries were present. The new statistics will be more thoroughly gone into this morning at an executive session of the society.

GASOLINE LAUNCH EXPLODES.

One Girl Falls Overboard, as Does One of the Rescuers.

In sight of more than 1,000 persons who had come to the opening of the Clason Point Yacht Club, near Throgg's Neck, early yesterday morning, a gasoline launch containing three men and three young women exploded from a leaking carbureter and took fire about 100 yards from shore.

In the launch were William and John Hyde of 2,022 Third Avenue, Edward Petty of 159 East 122d Street, Mary Hogan of 210 East 119th Street, Harriet Wilson of 2,197 Seventh Avenue, and Gertrude Higgins of 342 East 122d Street. All were thrown into a panic by the explosion, and the Hogan girl, rushing to the rear of the launch, tried to pull in a small rowboat they had been towing. She leaned out too far and fell into the water. William Hyde, held by his brother and Petty, leaned over the side of the launch until he could grasp the girl by the hair and pull her into the boat.

Meanwhile Charles Lutz and Cornelius Quinn, who had seen the accident from the shore, put out in a motor boat. In his haste Quinn himself fell overboard, but was drawn back by his companion. Reaching the launch, they found the Hogan girl unconscious and the others hysterical. All were brought to shore in the boat and attended by physicians.

The launch was burned to the water's edge, with a damage of about $350.

SNAGS IN THE WAY OF TRACTION PLAN

Bondholders Have Been Hoping to Buy in Metropolitan Lines Without a Cash Outlay.

ASSUMING ONLY THE LIENS

More Groundwork of the Plan to Revive the System Depends on Reductions in Leased Lines Rentals.

The desire of the Metropolitan Street Railway bondholders to have the foreclosure sale of the property under the collateral trust mortgage of 1898, known as the Guaranty Trust Company mortgage, postponed until the decree of foreclosure had been prepared in the suit based upon the refunding mortgage of 1902, of which the Morton Trust Company was trustee, became clear yesterday. Bronson Winthrop, counsel for the Morton Trust Company, which is now merged with the Guaranty Trust, went before Judge Lacombe in the United States Circuit Court and submitted a form of decree which, if approved by the court, would allow the common bondholding interest to bid in the property without paying any cash at all, merely by assuming the liens against it, to which the court may give priority over the two bond issues, or either of them.

The upset price named by Judge Lacombe in the decree of foreclosure handed down in the suit under the Guaranty Trust mortgage of 1898 was $10,000,000. This sum, according to the decree, had to be paid into the court in cash, out of which was to be disbursed the amount of the claims given preference over that particular issue of bonds. Until yesterday the form of decree for the sale under the Morton Trust Company mortgage had not been submitted to the court, and consequently the upset price for that sale, covering the assets which the court has separated from the lien of the 1898 mortgage, has not been fixed. It has been believed that the upset price for the 1902 mortgage would be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000, as there are considerable parcels of real estate securing those bonds which the earlier issue does not touch.

This $14,000,000, or the $10,000,000 named in the decree on the 1898 mortgage, plus whatever upset price the court fixed for the 1902 mortgage, would have to be raised in cash by the joint bondholders' reorganization committee, which is intending to bid the property in, if the sales either separately or jointly proceeded in the regular course of things. But under the form of decree which Mr. Winthrop submitted yesterday it would be possible for the holders of the prior issue of bonds to refuse to bid at all, and then for the holders of the junior bonds to bid in the property at a nominal price, subject to all the liens, including that of the mortgage of 1898.

Court Seems Not Impressed.

Having obtained the possession of the property in this way and being free from the domination of the court, the bondholders would then be free, inasmuch as the trusteeship under both mortgages is now merged in one institution—the present Guaranty Trust Company—and the majority of both issues of bonds are deposited with the one reorganization committee, to operate it without reorganization as long as they saw fit, and hold up the approved classes of claims pending the reorganization. Long litigation over these claims, which have now been in the courts for nearly three years, would unquestionably result if this course were taken.

When Mr. Winthrop handed up his proposed form of decree yesterday Judge Lacombe was quick to perceive its effect.

"This decree," remarked he, "would allow those interested in the foreclosure to get possession of the property covered by the two mortgages without even paying the upset price mentioned in the Guaranty Trust decree, by not bidding when the property covered by the first mortgage was put up, and then bidding at the sale under the Morton Trust mortgage."

"Why should the purchaser be required to pay $10,000,000, or anything more than a nominal sum, when he agrees to take over the liens described in the two mortgages?" inquired Mr. Winthrop.

"Then he could burn up the first mortgage if he chose to do so," replied the court, "although the decree of sale provided for the creation of a fund of $10,000,000 to pay off the preferred claims."

"Yes, and the purchaser under the second mortgage ought to get the property without paying a cent when he assumes to take over the obligations and liens," Mr. Winthrop insisted.

Attorneys for Creditors Notified.

Judge Lacombe did not further indicate his views, as he took the papers submitted by counsel and reserved his decision. He directed the attorneys for the contract creditors, who want certain bonds placed under the 1902 mortgage segregated to meet their claims, and Benjamin S. Catchings, attorney for the committee of accident creditors, who contends that these claims should be preferred over the bonds, to file their ideas as to the modification of the form of decree by to-morrow, after which the court will work out the decree in its final shape.

According to the plans of the bondholders' committee, as outlined in THE TIMES last Saturday, there are two important negotiations involved which will require considerable time to be brought to a conclusion. One is that proposed to the holders of the underlying securities of the Metropolitan system on which extortionate dividends are being paid as rental. The reduction of these rentals is deemed by the bondholders essential to the continued operation of the system on present lines, and they must thrash out with the owners of these roads whether it is for the mutual interest to readjust the rentals according to actual earnings or let many of the subsidiary lines go out of the Metropolitan to shift for themselves.

The other negotiation, necessarily dependent upon that just mentioned, involves the taxes of the Metropolitan, which now eat up 10 per cent. of the gross income. The bondholders have hoped to be able to make an adjustment of taxes in bulk as a part of a plan to share profits with the city, but the discussion following THE TIMES' publication of the bondholders' plans has shown that until the item of special franchise taxes, which contributes about half the total, has been revised through action in the courts it will not be much use to approach the public authorities.

All Depends on Lease Rentals.

The reduction of the special franchise taxes, however, under a recent decision of Justice O'Gorman with respect to the back franchise taxes, cannot be asked for so long as the extravagant rentals are being paid, for, Justice O'Gorman held, the courts must assume that the rentals paid on the subsidiary lines are the measure of the value of the special franchises on such lines, and cannot consider earnings disproportionate to these rentals so long as the lessee company gives its sanction to the arrangement by continuing the lease and paying them.

All of these conditions mean delay, and delay means that interest will have to be paid on $10,000,000 or more from the time of the foreclosure sale until the definite reorganization. The advantage to the bondholders of getting the properties merely by the assumption of certain liens and without putting up the cash is obvious, but whatever the outcome of the attempt the situation is now thoroughly disclosed where further developments will become quickly a matter of public record.

MURRAY HILL HOTEL SOLD.

B. L. M. Bates, the Present Lessee, Gives $1,796,500 for It at Auction.

The Murray Hill Hotel was sold at auction yesterday in the Vesey Street salesroom for $1,796,500. The purchaser was B. L. M. Bates, the lessee of the property, who also manages the Hotel Belmont. This is the highest price paid for a parcel of New York real estate in the auction room for many months. Joseph P. Day was the auctioneer.

The offering of so well-known and valuable a property as the Murray Hill Hotel, which occupies the entire Park Avenue block front on the west between Fortieth and Forty-first Streets, with a depth of 230 feet on Fortieth Street and 130 feet on Forty-first Street, brought out a large number of real estate investors and operators. Bidding was started at $1,200,000 by William L. De Borst, representing the Cruikshank Company.

William H. Wheelock of the Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company then stepped in, and between the two the price was quickly raised to $1,775,000. Then John Delahunty, attorney for Mr. Bates, began bidding, and the price was advanced until the final bid of $1,796,500 by Mr. Delahunty. In the opinion of real estate operators, the price was regarded as remarkably high. The property is assessed at $1,400,000.

The sale was held in a partition suit to settle the estate of Hugh Smith, in which about a dozen heirs are interested. The hotel, a seven-story structure, was built about twenty-five years ago at a cost of $1,000,000.

EX-SUGAR WEIGHER CORROBORATES PARR

Springs Such as Government Agent Found Were Used on All Scales, He Says.

ADMITS FALSE TESTIMONY

Former Employe Says He Denied Knowing of Frauds Because Trust Official Held a Mortgage Against Him.

Te Government sprang a surprise on the defense yesterday in the trial of Charles R. Heike and five ex-employes of the Sugar Trust for a conspiracy to defraud the United States in the importation of sugar at the Havemeyer & Elder piers in Williamsburg, which is going on before Judge Martin in the United States Circuit Court. It produced a witness—a former checker employed by the trust to keep tabs on the Government weighers—who declared that steel springs like the one that Richard Parr found inserted in the journal of Scale No. 1 in his raid of Nov. 20, 1907, were used in all the scales on the Williamsburg piers where sugar was weighed to fix the duty.

Frederick Schwerdtfeger, the witness, said he worked for the Sugar Trust for many years up to 1907. He recognized the steel spring that Parr seized in his raid, said that such springs had been in use by the sugar company's checkers since 1901, and that before that, from the time when the Wilson tariff of 1894 was passed, a little bag of lead pellets had been openly attached to the scale mechanism by the Sugar Trust's checkers in such a way as to decrease the registry of the apparatus. Schwerdtfeger's wife then identified the steel spring, saying that she had often seen her husband bring home a similar one in the time in which he worked for the sugar company.

The evidence of Schwerdtfeger is the worst blow that the defense has received thus far, for unless vitiated by a contrary affidavit and testimony, which Schwerdtfeger declared he gave because Spitzer, the trust's pier boss, held a mortgage on his farm, it will dispose of the suspicion that the defense in the previous trials had been able to cast upon Parr's story of finding a spring in only one of the Government scales. The examination of the other scales has revealed holes in the stanchions like the hole in No. 1 scale, but the defense has always sought to imply that Parr concocted his story out of whole cloth and foisted the steel spring upon the Government.

Schwerdtfeger was called to the stand by Henry L. Stimson, who is conducting the case of the prosecution, as soon as the attorneys for the defense had finished their cross-examination of Parr yesterday morning. Mr. Stimson held up the little steel spring which Parr said he found, and asked if the witness had ever seen anything like that before. Schwerdtfeger said he had.

"Who had it?" asked Mr. Stimson.

All Had Steel Springs.

"We all had them," replied the witness, who went on to say that he had seen these springs used in his employment by the sugar company in 1907, and had seen them used by Checkers Boyle, Coyle, Hennessy, and Kehoe, who were convicted on the last trial; Voelker, who is on trial at this time, and two others, named Rudolph Stein and Heffernan.

Schwerdtfeger said that he worked the steel spring by pushing it as far as he could into the journal of the scale through the hole in the scale stanchion when the draft was about to be put on the weighing platform. The holes, he declared, were in the stanchions when he first received his steel spring. He declared that there were two kinds of springs, light ones and heavy ones, the light ones producing a variation of ten pounds and the heavy ones a variation of twenty pounds. At night, said Schwerdtfeger, he and the others put the steel springs in their pockets and took them home. Hence the information which his wife gave to the jury yesterday. Schwerdtfeger said he got $15, and later $18, a week when in the sugar company's employ, and said that this was $3 more than was paid to the men who didn't use the steel springs. Both he and his wife stated that his pay envelopes bore on the outside a memorandum of wages $3 less than the amount actually contained.

At the afternoon session Schwerdtfeger in continuing his story declared that prior to 1901, when the linen bags full of shot were used, Richard Whally, who has furnished the Government with some of the information it has used in the sugar prosecutions, worked on the scales with the rest and used the linen bag as the others did. All this was done openly at that time, Schwerdtfeger added, the bag being hung on the scales at a point where it counteracted the pressure exerted by the movable weights that slid along the notched scale.

When Attorney Cochrane for the defense began his cross-examination the first question was:

"What is a double-header?"

The witness exhibited considerable embarrassment and finally replied:

"He is a man who takes money from both the company and the city weighers."

"Were you ever a double header?" demanded Mr. Cochrane.

"Just once," said Schwerdtfeger.

In response to further questions Schwerdtfeger said that he was before the Grand Jury in Brooklyn in 1898 and denied any knowledge of the use of the steel springs, but he explained that at that time Spitzer had a mortgage on his farm at Jeffersonville, N. Y., and he feared that the mortgage would be foreclosed. Later, he added, the Government agents came to him, said that they had a warrant for his arrest, and that he had better tell the truth, so he changed to his present story. He also admitted getting a suit of clothes from the Government.

Then Mr. Cochrane produced a paper and showed it to the witness, asking him if he had signed it.

Says Affidavit Was Enlarged.

"That is my signature, but something has been added to that paper since I signed it. There was then a space between the typewriting and my signature," the witness replied.

Then followed a set-to between United States Attorney Stimson and Mr. Cochrane which ended in the paper being introduced in evidence and shown to the court and the jury. Mr. Cochrane tried to recall it, but it was too late. The paper was an affidavit and read:

State of New York, Sullivan County.

Frederick Schwerdtfeger, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at Jeffersonville, Sullivan County, and that he was formerly in the employ of the American Sugar Refining Company at its refinery in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, as a weigher or tallyman, and during all the time in which he was in said capacity he was familiar with and at all times used the scales at said refinery, [this was the point at which Schwerdtfeger declared the affidavit stopped when he signed it, a period following the word "refinery." As produced yesterday a comma followed "refinery," and the affidavit continued], which said scales are on the dock between South Fifth Street and South First Street, and also on the South Third Street Pier, and he never saw or knew of any device or appliance whatever used in connection with said scales in the weighing of raw sugar which would affect said scales in any way.

FREDERICK SCHWERDTFEGER.
ALPHUIS POTTS, Notary.

The other witness yesterday, in addition to Mrs. Schwerdtfeger, whose testimony has been referred to, was an authority on scales called by the Government to explain the operation of the sugar-weighing scales and the effect on them of the steel springs.

Forbid Piano Guessing Contests.

RICHMOND, Va., May 19.—The National Piano Dealers' Association, which is holding its first convention here, yesterday passed a resolution aimed at guessing contests, declaring that the association discountenanced "the use of certificates in conducting special sales, and requested its members to aid in the crusade against the use of sales issuing such certificates." The purpose of the resolution is to prevent the cheapening of the piano business by side line inducements held out to buyers, and to stimulate legitimate trade.

MATTHEW J. GOLDNER INDICTED IN QUEENS

He Is Charged with Grand Larceny and the Forging of a Public Document.

GRAND JURY AFTER 2 MORE

Cornelius Burke and Robert Kreuscher Must Explain Certain Sewer Inspection Matters—They Plead May 28.

Matthew J. Goldner, for twenty years an office holder, and joint owner with Joseph Cassidy in the pretentious Cassidy Democratic Club house, in Long Island City, passed yesterday from a secure position as Queens County's "easy boss" in retirement into the status of an indicted defendant, awaiting trial on charges of grand larceny and forgery of a public document. He has never been accused of being in politics for his health, and is reputed to have taken a comfortable fortune with him on his retirement with the Bermel régime two years ago.

He was not allowed yesterday to come within hearing of creaking jail doors alone. After he had been arrested on a bench warrant, his old friend, Joseph Bermel, the deposed Borough President, accompanied him to the Court House, and brought with him money enough to furnish bail at $2,500 each on both of the indictments returned.

The Grand Jury report finding indictments against Goldner was the first handed up in the present graft hunt. Two other Queens politicians, both of them attached to the régime of President Lawrence Gresser, were also indicted. They were Cornelius Burke, ex-Superintendent of the Bureau of Sewers, who resignd at the opening of the graft hunt and must now answer two indictments, and Robert Kreuscher, a Democratic District Captain and saloon keeper of Far Rockaway, who was, according to the testimony taken before Commissioner Fosdick, "taken care of" by being allowed to collect money as a Sewer Inspector for sewers he had never seen, and is now indicted on three counts.

Burke and Goldner figured in the original reports made to Gov. Hughes by the Citizens' Committee six weeks ago, while the case against Kreuscher was developed by Commissioner Fosdick upon evidence furnished by Joseph Nelson, the deposed Sewer Department clerk, who confessed after having been turned out by Gresser.

Kreuscher is charged with grand larceny on two counts and with presenting fraudulent claims to the city on a third.

He is the District Captain who was designated by Borough President Gresser, according to testimony before Commissioner Fosdick, to receive pay for four weeks' work on one occasion and for three weeks' work on another as Inspector on a private sewer in Channel Avenue, Rockaway Beach. Under the rigorous cross-examination of the Commissioner, Kreuscher abandoned his denials of complicity in the case. He admitted that he had never even seen Channel Avenue, and had signed an inspection report upon it prepared by some one else.

Burke, who is indicted in connection with this same case, is charged with having forged the name of Thomas Brown to sewer inspection reports and with having attempted to collect money from the city for the fraudulently audited claim. The case against Goldner is based upon a $250 check paid by the G. X. Mathews Building Company, which was afterward found deposited to Goldner's personal bank account. He is charged with larceny of the check and with forgery of public documents, in that he failed to account for the check in his regular returns.

The fall of Goldner had been long expected in Queens, and it is regarded as certain that at his trial, or through subsequent indictments, many dark corners of Queens political history will be brought to light. Among other things Commissioner Fosdick is attempting to find out where the money came from which built the Cassidy-Goldner Clubhouse, at a time when irregularities were prevalent in the department, over which Goldner presided, and a large amount of public funds was being diverted to private channels.

Goldner's career as a climber through the Queens Democratic organization began when Long Island City had still an independent Government of its own. He was an Under Sheriff until 1890, but he then made a successful campaign to be chief in the office, the ways of which he had learned as an assistant. Upon consolidation, eight years later, he was made Superintendent of Sewers, and continued to hold the place till the end of the last Cassidy administration.

On the election of Joseph Bermel, for whom it is alleged he had quietly worked while holding the position of Treasurer of Cassidy's campaign, he became Superintendent of Public Buildings. In the Kissena Park scandal he was under fire along with his chief, and one of the things that President Gresser had to do upon succeeding Bermel was to ask for Goldner's resignation.

It was immediately tendered, and Goldner passed from public life to enjoy a private fortune of about $200,000. For a year he has been ill, and he several times showed signs of being near collapse when arraigned yesterday. With the others he will plead to the indictment on May 28.

Municipal Court Judge John M. Cragen, who was at one time President Gresser's secretary, subject of the postage stamp graft report, could not be seen yesterday. His friends, however, joined him in his defense of blaming the $45 graft, twenty-one times repeated, upon his office boy. The report, forwarded by the Mayor on Wednesday, was not received by the Grand Jury in time to be considered yesterday. It will be taken up on Monday, together with a report dealing with President Gresser, from which important developments are expected.

GEORGE H. EARLE RESIGNS.

Leaves Philadelphia Rapid Transit Directorate as the City's Representative.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—George H. Earle, the well-known financier, who figured prominently in the earlier efforts to effect a settlement of the recent street car strike, to-day sent to City Councils his resignation as a representative of the city on the Board of Directors of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company. The only reason he would give for resigning was that he could not afford the time necessary.

Mr. Earle has not attended any of the meetings of the board since the disagreement between him and the publicity department of the company following a conference between the company officials and strike leaders.

BUGHER INDIGNANT; WANTS TO RESIGN

Persuaded by the Mayor to Think Over a Plan to Make Him Second Police Deputy.

IN CHARGE OF BROOKLYN

Mr. Bugher Doesn't Mind the Job, but What He Regards as Demotion Doesn't Appeal to Him.

It will not be surprising if First Deputy Police Commissioner Frederick H. Bugher resigns from the Police Department this morning. He had positively made up his mind yesterday to do so. Mayor Gaynor, after talking long with him, persuaded him to think the matter over until this morning. But Mr. Bugher does not readily change his mind.

As almost every one knew, Police Commissioner Baker and Mr. Bugher, his First Deputy, have long been at loggerheads. Recent remarks of Mr. Baker about Mr. Bugher did not improve their relations, and it is well known that Mr. Bugher, who has independent means, has remained in the department largely in response to the wishes of the Mayor.

His open break with Commissioner Baker dates back several months, when the Commissioner returned from a trip to Atlantic City to find that his First Deputy in his absence had issued orders displeasing to him. Presently the Commissioner took away Mr. Bugher's handsome, roomy office on the second floor of Police Headquarters, giving him in return a room unfavorably compared to a closet, so small and stuffy was it in comparison.

When the reporters asked the Commissioner about this he said:

"Well, Commissioner Bugher is a small man."

"Do you mean physically, or mentally?" they asked.

"Both," the Commissioner responded. When the afternoon newspapers published this interview, which Commissioner Baker said later was given in confidence, the fat was in the fire. Since then the two have hardly been on speaking terms. Not long afterward Deputy Commissioner Bugher also took a vacation, returning only a few days ago.

The Mayor, understanding that it was unprofitable to try to keep Mr. Bugher under the same roof with his superior, has meantime been trying to reach a solution of the difficulty while retaining Mr. Bugher's services for the department, for he thinks highly of the First Deputy Commissioner, both personally and as an official, and was strongly tempted to appoint him Health Commissioner to succeed Dr. Darlington.

To preserve harmony and prevent embarrassments the Mayor hit upon the idea of transferring Mr. Bugher to Brooklyn, where he would be almost supreme, with little interference from Commissioner Baker in prospect. When Commissioner Baker was sounded on this plan he agreed to it, except that he argued that Mr. Bugher ought to be reduced in rank, nominally at least, to Second Deputy Commissioner, on the ground that the man at Headquarters who took the Commissioner's place in the Commissioner's absence should be the First Deputy in name as well as in authority. The Mayor agreed with this, so it was determined to move Second Deputy Commissioner Charles W. Kirby to first place and to bring Fourth Deputy Commissioner Reynolds, now over the Brooklyn department, to Headquarters. This seemed a good arrangement to those who planned it, but not to Mr. Bugher. When he heard of the proposed reduction in rank to accompany disposition of him and his trouble with the Commissioner he hurried to the Mayor's office yesterday to protest. He wanted to resign at once. They were together a long time. It is understood that the Mayor tried to impress upon Mr. Bugher the importance of the Brooklyn post, telling him that his ability and experience would have far greater play there than in Manhattan, and that the appointment could not possibly be considered a demotion, whatever nominal title it carried with it. The Second Deputy Commissioner used to get only $4,000 a year, the First Deputy receiving $6,000, but now the Board of Estimate has equalized the salaries of all the deputies at the latter figure, so the nominal reduction in rank means no decrease in the size of the pay check. Whatever other arguments the Mayor used, he finally got Mr. Bugher to agree not to resign till he had slept on the plan.

If Mr. Bugher decides to remain it will be fairly pleasant, it is said, for all save Fourth Deputy Commissioner Reynolds, who will have to give up his post of ample authority in Brooklyn to come under the same roof with Commissioner Baker, between whom and himself, it is also said, no "love is lost."

Some time ago Commissioner Baker was quoted as having said that Mr. Reynolds was not of such mental or physical stature as to cause trouble for him, when it was suggested that the Fourth Deputy Commissioner might do so. Mr. Reynolds is understood to be a personal appointee of the Mayor.

When some comment on the interesting police situation was sought from Commissioner Baker in the afternoon he sent out word by his secretary, "Nothing to say."

VERDICT IN MINE DISASTER.

Laws Violated with Inspectors' Consent When 265 Men Perished at Cherry.

PRINCETON, Ill., May 19.—The Coroner's jury which began last November to investigate the cause of the Cherry mine disaster, which resulted in the death of 265 miners in the St. Paul Coal Company mine, has reached an agreement, and 250 separate verdicts have been returned. The jury says the mining laws were broken with the knowledge and consent of the mine Inspectors.

The verdicts were in three sets, one set fixing the cause of the death of the twelve men in the rescue party who perished on the cage in the mine shaft, another set for the 187 men who were suffocated in the second vein, and the third for the 51 men who were trapped in the third vein and died of exposure and suffocation. The verdict of the Coroner's jury vindicates John Cowley, the engineer who was in charge of the cage. The verdict blames "a confusion of signals" for the tragedy.

The following verdict was brought in for each of the 187 men who lost their lives in the second vein:

"We find that they came to their death by suffocation and that the fire was caused by a pitched load of baled hay coming in contact with an oil torch. And we further find that there was great delay in notifying the men of their danger."

The verdict giving the cause of the deaths of the men in the third vein says: "We find that they came to their death by exposure and suffocation. We further find that the mining laws of the State of Illinois in relation to means of escape were violated with the full knowledge and consent of the Mine Inspectors for District No. 2."

SIX BISHOPS CONSECRATED.

Imposing Ceremony Presided Over by Archbishop Ireland at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, May 19.—Archbishop Ireland here to-day consecrated simultaneously six Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church. It is the first time such a thing has occurred in the history of that church in America. Two older Bishops assisted Archbishop Ireland, and the ceremony took place in the chapel of St. Paul Seminary, close to the spot where Father Louis Hennepin, the first Christian missionary to the region of the future province, landed on the bank of the Mississippi, "a league below the Falls of St. Anthony," 230 years ago.

The Archbishop, his nine Bishops, and his 600 priests out of 900 now in the province, represented a Catholic population of 600,000. At the time the first Bishop of St. Paul was consecrated, sixty years ago, there were two priests only and perhaps 1,000 members of the church. The consecrator himself and the preacher of the consecration sermon, Bishop Thomas O'Gorman of Sioux Falls, were the first two seminarians of the Diocese of St. Paul chosen from among the boys of the first parish school by Bishop Cretin, first Bishop of St. Paul.

The ceremony to-day was attended by the Governor of the State and his staff, 600 priests, fifty Bishops, 150 Seminarians, Mgr. Diomede Falconi, Apostolic Delegate of the Vatican to the United States, and Archbishop Fergus Patrick MacEvoy of Toronto, Canada.

WHITRIDGE SLEUTHS FOOLED.

They Were Trailing Public Service Inspectors on Their Days Off.

There was some amusement in the office of the Public Service Commission yesterday when the facts were ascertained underlying the reports by detectives employed by Receiver Whitridge of the Third Avenue Railroad to shadow employes of the commission supposed to be engaged in inspecting the operation of the street railways of the city. Mr. Whitridge sent a letter to the commission which he made public on Wednesday, severely taking it to task for accepting the reports of its inspectors as to accidents and kindred incidents of railroad operation, and submitting in support of his contention that these reports were unreliable the statements of the Third Avenue road's detectives.

The discoveries made when the reports turned in ny Mr. Whitridge were checked up with the records of the commission's employes showed that several of the detectives' reports submitted by Mr. Whitridge related to the doings of the commission's employes on their days off.

PREDICTION BY MR. KNOX.

Message to Mohonk Conference—A Permanent Hague Arbitral Court.

MOHONK LAKE, N. Y., May 19.—"An International Judicial Arbitration Court" was the topic assigned for discussion to-day at the Lake Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration.

Simeon E. Baldwin, ex-Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Connecticut, pointed out some of the faults of the present court of nations established at the first Hague Conference, and expressed the hope that the proposition to make the Judges of the International Prize Court ex officio Judges of the Court of Arbitral Justice, which was indorsed by this Government last year, would receive general indorsement.

James Brown Scott, Solicitor of the State Department and a delegate to the second Hague Conference, brought an "authorized and directed" quotation from Secretary Knox, predicting that the third Hague Conference would find a permanent Court of Arbitral Justice in session at The Hague, and declaring that many powers were accepting the proposition, at least in principle.

NEWLANDS PLEADS FOR ART.

Holds Cannon Accountable for Failure of Plans to Beautify Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The American Federation of Art concluded its first annual convention to-day. The speeches were devoted largely to a plea for the development of the artistic tastes of the American people.

Senator Newlands of Nevada, in an address on "Art as a National Asset," held Speaker Cannon accountable for the failure of Congress to adopt the Park Commission's plan for developing and beautifying Washington. He said the people had gone far ahead of their legislators in the advancement of the fine arts, and advised the federation to begin an active campaign to win members of Congress over to true art interests.

A resolution was adopted asking Congress to carry into effect as promptly as possible the L'Enfant plan for the laying out and beautification of the National capital, as elaborated and perfected by the Burnham-McKim Commission.

Before adjournment the delegates were received by President Taft.

TRAIN WRECKERS FAIL.

New Haven Cars Safely Pass Two Ties Placed Across the Tracks.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 19.—An attempt was made last evening about 7 o'clock to wreck an inbound train on the New Canaan Branch of the New Haven Road. Two railroad ties were placed on the tracks opposite the Catholic Cemetery in Springdale, a suburb of Stamford, at a point where the road curves widely. The train hit the ties running at high speed. The ties were not fastened and the blow hurled one of them high in the air, the other was caught in the locomotive guard and broken into small pieces.

The train did not leave the tracks and no one was hurt. The front of the locomotive was broken in two or three places. Chief Morehouse of the railroad police force and several of his men are here seeking the would-be train wreckers. Many wealthy New Yorkers have Summer places in New Canaan, and the occurrence has frightened them, for the New Canaan express on which they travel passed the spot only a short time previously.

IRISH SOCIALISTS ATTACK THE CHURCH

Reply to the Anti-Socialistic Meetings Held Under Auspices of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

TAMMANY DENOUNCED, TOO

And the Stars and Stripes Declared to be "All Right for Scabs"—Marx Took His Doctrine from Irishmen.

Irishmen attacking the Catholic Church and Irishmen applauding the attack were the spectacle seen last night at 19 East Twenty-sixth Street, where the Irish Socialist Federation had a meeting to offset several recent meetings, held under the auspices of St. Patrick's Cathedral, at which Socialism was attacked. It had been announced that Thomas S. Londregan would speak against Socialism last night, to be followed by pro-Socialist orators. Chairman Patrick L. Quinlan called on him.

"If the speaker who is to speak against Socialism is here," he said, "let him arise."

The Irish Socialists, who filled the hall, gazed fiercely around.

"We have done our duty at any rate," said Mr. Quinlan, and called in one who seemed willing to take Mr. Londregan's place. He began by declaring that the men who engineered the so-called anti-Socialistic meetings under the auspices of the Catholic Church were simply trying to turn the Church into a political organization. The Croker family, he declared, were close neighbors of his in South Ireland, and when they were over there they were Protestants.

"But when Richard Croker came over here," Mr. Quinlan declared, "he at once appeared to be a devout Catholic."

Tammany Hall, he went on, had done more to discredit Ireland and the Irish than any other one agency in this country, and Irish and Irish-Americans, members of Tammany, he asserted, have been fattening on the white slave traffic.

Mr. Quinlan noted, too, in passing that Karl Marx was not the father of Socialism, but that James Thompson of Cork first promulgated its basic idea.

As there was a dearth of speakers, Mr. Quinlan introduced Seumas O'Sheel, the perfect Bohemian, dilletante, and upholder of the banner of the ideal. He had a heavy book under one arm and a green hat under the other. He stood in the doorway at perfect ease when the Chairman's eye fell upon him. He had been upstairs reading, for the house is the home of a radical organization.

"I was upstairs pursuing my studies in the fated English literature," said Mr. O'Sheel, speaking with a charming drawl and with most admirable precision, "when I heard the sounds of eloquence down here."

Then he ran his fingers through his great superstructure of artistically plied black hair, and allowed his fancy to play round the results of an adaptation of Socialism by the Church.

Jack Walsh, a young man, with a black shirt, asked the audience if it could imagine any one making saints out of Morris Hilquitt, Sol Fieldman, and Julius Hopp, and the audience shouted back that it could not follow the poet.

It appeared that the speakers at the recent anti-Socialistic meetings had said that Marxism was antagonistic to "The flag." Chairman Quinlan said that the Stars and Stripes were all right, though a Chinaman could probably improve on them, but Comrade Walsh declared that all Socialists are foreigners wherever they go, regardless of all the talk about flags.

With a note of apology in his voice Chairman Quinlan introduced Adolph Benevy, President of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association. "Some of you may wonder why it is that he speaks," said Mr. Quinlan. "Remember, we Socialists are citizens of the world, and all men are our brothers."

With this encouragement the President of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association started to talk about Socialism from the time of the Tower of Babel.

MISSING MAN FOUND IN JAIL.

Lost Cleveland Manufacturer Turns Out to be a Convicted Bigamist.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 19.—Walter C. Lytle, a manufacturer, who has been missing from here for a year, has been found in a Mississippi penitentiary, where he is serving a ten-year sentence for bigamy. At the same time the discovery was made that Lytle's bigamous wives number certainly four, of not more. He is said to possess considerable means.

Lytle was convicted in February at Tupelo, Miss., on the complaint of Miss Mamie Burke, who married him in December. According to the Tupelo Sheriff, he has information that Lytle has at least six wives. At Camden a warrant is held for Lytle, charging bigamy on the evidence of Estella Shinn, who claims to have married him twenty-six years ago, and also Hattie L. Lamont, who says she became Mrs. Lytle on June 9, 1909.

On Saturday, in Montrose, Col., Mrs. Anna E. Brown Lytle obtained a divorce on the grounds of bigamy. She was the woman whom Lytle left in Cleveland when he disappeared.

FIGHT IN THE COURT AT WILLIAMS TRIAL

Two Lawyers Clinch with Policemen in an Effort to Get Out of the Room.

CASE TO THE JURY TO-DAY

Judges and Other Office Holders Testify to the Tammany District Leader's Good Character.

Angry disputes twice interrupted the summing up of Deputy Attorney General Ezra Prentice yesterday in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, where Roswell D. Williams and six of his followers are on trial for conspiracy to commit frauds in the last primary election. Justice Wheeler will charge the jury when court opens this morning.

The defense closed its case with the testimony of character witnesses. Surrogate John P. Cohalan, City Judge Peter Schmuck, and Coroner's Physician Peter J. O'Hanlon told of Williams's high character. Judge Swann of the Court of General Sessions said he would come down to testify to the same effect, and Mr. Prentice conceded that he would, so that it was not necessary for Judge Swann to appear at the trial.

Capt. Lynch, in charge of the court squad, had given orders that no one was to be allowed to leave the courtroom during the summings-up of counsel. The first outbreak came when several men rose during the early part of Mr. Prentice's address. The court attendants ordered the men to sit down, and all but one obeyed. This man, a tall lawyer with a gray beard, started to argue with a court attendant, and ended by thrusting him to one side. Another attendant rushed to intercept the lawyer, and they clinched, going out of the courtroom together.

The second interruption was even more disturbing. A tall, thin man, seated well forward, rose and started to thread his way to the door through the densely packed crowd inside the railing, and make his exit from the courtroom by going through the rear passage behind the banked seats. Capt. Lynch blocked his way.

"I'm a lawyer," the man muttered. "I have an important engagement in a few minutes."

"That makes no difference. Sit down or I'll take you before the Judge."

"That's right, take me before the Judge," retorted the man.

Capt. Lynch made an effort to seize the man's arm, and he threw both of his arms around the Captain's neck. Lynch seized him about the waist and started to rush him, football fashion, back to his seat, while the lawyer kicked and struggled to get free. Everybody in the courtroom stood up, and Mr. Prentice had to stop speaking. Justice Wheeler pounded on the bench with his gavel, and the court clerk shouted for order.

With a mighty final rush, Capt. Lynch tossed the lawyer into his seat, right on top of a derby hat, which had been placed there by a spectator. The hat was smashed, and the owner hissed his opinion of the episode at the lawyer, until he was stopped by Policeman Fitzpatrick, who threatened to arrest him for contempt of court.

Mr. Prentice spent forty-five minutes in reviewing the testimony in the case, and Mr. Jordan, for Williams and his associates, spent nearly two hours.

The parting shot of the defense to the jury was:

"If these men did these things they should have guardians as incompetents, instead of being branded as criminals."

The final shot of the prosecution was:

"If men can do things like this without punishment, there is no use in having an election law."

SHRINKING UNDER TEST.

The suggestion that it is not popular to bait the railway and industrial trusts is less preposterous than before it was testified to by President TAFT and Attorney General WICKERSHAM. In the forefront of the authorized version of his Administration's achievements the President laments that he has not been able to put some trust magnate behind the bars. There is no lack of evidence, he says, and he cites conviction of one corporation, but on the same evidence the jury acquitted the corporation's President. What can a trust buster do when juries acquit in a good case?

Attorney General WICKERSHAM'S plaint was similar. He was defending the corporation tax law with an intrepidity born of desperation. The law being written, and being in process of enforcement, could not be explained away or palliated. It speaks for itself, and is exactly what it was said everybody wanted before it was enacted, and yet its enactment was followed by universal dissatisfaction. In such circumstances there was nothing to do but to ridicule those of such uncertain convictions on the corporation question. This was Mr. WICKERSHAM'S line. Said he:

> People who for years had been clamoring for greater publicity in the affairs of corporations and for Government supervision and the prevention of corporate abuse became indignant when they found that their own particular corporations were required to make returns as well as their neighbor's. What they wanted was publicity for others, and not for themselves.

Spoken like a very Daniel come to judgment. BRUTUS merely sentenced his own son, but here we have the leaders of the Republican Party sentencing themselves to unpopularity in the execution of a policy which juries and the holders of half of the mobile wealth of the country condemn.

On any less authoritative testimony it would be an incredible assertion, but Mr. TAFT supplies the philosophy of the fact as well as the testimony. The acts of the trusts are undeniable, but they are "newly created crimes. It is easy for the average citizen to declaim about what should be done to the makers of trusts, but when he is actually in the jury box he finds it very difficult to send a man to jail for practices that until within a comparatively short time have been considered legitimate and clever." Nothing could be truer. But since when has the standard of the commercial world changed so that in the opinion of an average man the formation of trusts is illegitimate, and not clever? It is not a question of condemnation of such universal practices by lawmakers and politicians. We know that they are all for putting more teeth into the laws which the juries decline to apply to individuals. It is freely admitted that the Administration has done wonders in the application of the laws which it inherited and strengthened both by addition and by enforcement. The Administration is less to blame for remissness in the execution of the laws than for excess of vigor, and the question is how it is possible to become unpopular for such admirable conduct.

The explanation is simple, and is supplied more at large by the gentlemen whose words have been quoted. The acts are not immoral in their nature, says Mr. TAFT through his authorized interpreter, but are merely prohibited by the legislators while practiced by all. Mr. WICKERSHAM added candidly that the laws were enacted only for application to the other fellow. Hardly a day passes without occurrences illustrating the truth of these remarks. Trusts are formed daily. There is amazing activity and prosperity among the railways of Canada and Mexico, while Americans are pilloried for trying to start a railway in Alaska in the same way. If those who think this a disreputable and unpatriotic thing to do would only do it themselves, according to the principles which they profess, the country might profit more than by the construction of railways in the old-fashioned manner. The trouble is that nobody comes forward to develop the country's resources in the new way. If those principles had been applied to Pennsylvania, or to the prairies, the country would have been held back generations. The Westerners are solid for conservation elsewhere, but reject the practice of the principles when applied to themselves. If Alaska is to be developed in the Russian bureaucratic manner, it will long remain what it was in the Russian régime. The contrast between those times and these is to the advantage of the present, even with its possibility of criticisms in detail. It irritates the standpatters to ask them why they do not make it a crime to import goods for a profit, and it irritates the reformers to ask why they do not make it as much a crime to build a railway as to form a trust. The reason is that the people want railways and trusts. It is popular enough to talk against them, but if it is seen that any real harm is impending juries will not convict. Nobody has so well explained the unpopularity of what is being done at Washington as Mr. TAFT and Mr. WICKERSHAM themselves.

CENTRAL PARK AGAIN.

The big public playground proposed by the President of the Board of Aldermen is probably much to be desired for the health of the poor children, but Central Park is not the place for it. There is no spare land there for new ball grounds, nurseries, shelters, swimming pools, and wading pools. Mr. MITCHEL says that everything has been done in Central Park that can be done for "the automobilist, the equestrian, and the pedestrian." He does not mean that the people who ride in carriages pulled by horses have been slighted. He would not deny that the occupants of baby carriages are permitted to enjoy themselves, and do enjoy themselves, in Central Park.

There are also accommodations, all that can fairly be spared, for baseball and tennis players, and the belated but assiduous devotees of croquet; the amateur photographers have privileges in the Park; concessions are made to picnickers; there are swings and a merry-go-round; on the three lakes children and grown-ups may row or sail in motor boats in Summer and skate when there is firm ice in the Winter. There are various refreshment places with a range of prices for food and drink to suit all purses. There are goat wagons for the infants on the Mall, and patient donkeys for youthful riders near the menagerie where people of all ages may gaze with awe on the king of beasts, with unceasing astonishment on the hippopotamus, with unfailing amusement on the monkey. There are band concerts in warm weather, with ample provision for many thousands to hear the music.

There is something in Central Park for everybody, on foot or on horseback, in motor cars or carriages, and above all there are many acres of landscape gardening of a quality scarcely surpassed in the world. There cannot be in Central Park everything for everybody. Mr. MITCHEL doubtless has a warm heart. He must not be permitted to respond to its appeals in defiance of the good of the whole public. We may rely on the good judgment, tact, and experience of Park Commissioner STOVER in this matter.

There is a small but growing opposition in this city to the preservation of Central Park in its present form. Many persons would like to see buildings erected in the Park. The sale of much of it to pay the city's debts has been suggested if not advocated. There has been, and there will be again, much talk of building art galleries, concert halls, athletic arenas in the Park. Mr. STOVER knows all about this. We fancy, too, that he knows that every new plan to make of Central Park something that it is not and was never designed to be serves to strengthen this ill-defined, unorganized, but dangerous opposition to the preservation of it. Central Park should be preserved for all time as a park for all the people, and any increase of special privileges of any sort should be sternly discountenanced.

THE COMET.

Considerable additions to the public stock of knowledge about comets have resulted from the untiring scrutiny to which HALLEY'S comet has been subjected since it first came within the range of our vision a few weeks ago. As a sort of bull against this and all other comets, it may be remarked that these additions to our knowledge are chiefly negative. Astronomers are so accustomed to the use of minus quantities that they will not balk at a suggestion that addition may be the result of subtraction. In past times men have known, or surmised, a great deal about comets that was not so. There has been a world of speculation as to what would happen if a comet should fall into the earth or into the sun. Prof. CHARLES A. YOUNG used to say that if a comet should fall into the earth it would disturb the inhabitants thereof about as much as the throwing of a featherbed into the ocean would disturb the whales. The results of observations taken at the Jesuit observatories in the Philippines confirm this comforting view. Those patient astronomers, under the most favorable conditions, watched the sun during the time when the head of the comet traversed its disk between 3:30 and 11 A. M. yesterday, and observed no obscuration of any part of the solar surface save that occasioned by a few sunspots, of which notice has been taken elsewhere. This would seem to be a demonstration that the head of the comet is not made up of solid matter; that these wanderers of the skies are throughout their whole extent gaseous, the head being only somewhat more dense than the tail.

As to the comet's tail, it may be described as a mere manifestation without much substance. According to some theories it has no substance. Yet, undeniably, a good many of the earth's people were not a little alarmed about the consequences of the passage of our sphere through that tail. The spectroscope had told us that it contained cyanogen, which is a highly unpleasant gas, so remarkably unpleasant, indeed, that if it had in sufficient quantities been diffused through our atmosphere the people of the earth would have been suffocated. We passed through the tail, or we did not pass through it—the astronomers have not quite settled the point yet—and nothing happened. Inasmuch as astronomers have assured us that the whole tail of HALLEY'S comet, with its intolerable millions of miles of length, could be comfortably stowed in a cask, it is not surprising that nothing happened. The so-called auroral displays were very likely connected with the sunspots, and not with the comet. We believe a meteoric stone, or something of the kind, did fall through the roof of a Kansas real estate man's office, but that is liable to happen at any time.

So we know now, so far as knowledge is possible of objects so far away, that the head of a comet is not composed of solid matter, and that the tail of a comet is of such extraordinarily tenuous composition that we can neither hear, taste, feel, nor smell it. So we really have learned something about comets by unlearning what we supposed we knew or had conjectured before.

Ambitious to maintain its place as the leading comet organ, THE TIMES yesterday announced that from the tower of The Times Building that band of light, 100 degrees or more in length, stretching from the horizon to the star Altair, which is the tail of the comet, was still visible in the eastern skies from 2:30 to 3 A. M. Thursday, May 19. It was the opinion of Miss PROCTOR that this part of the tail, seen as the earth was passing through it, was its outer boundary. From this time on the comet will become an adornment of the evening skies. It should be visible soon after sunset, and would be but for the envious moon, which is just now approaching the stage of fullness. However, the moon may be expected to wane as usual, and then the comet can be studied without the inconvenience of keeping late hours. It is rapidly going away from us, however, and will soon become less brilliant. The multitudes of photographs that have been taken of HALLEY'S comet upon the occasion of this visit will, no doubt, be preserved, to be used for comparison by astronomers who will study the visitor, with much improved instruments, upon its return seventy-five years hence. The point of chief interest will be to determine whether it has diminished in breadth of head, length of tail, or undergone other changes in appearance.

SENATOR ALDRICH'S INGRATITUDE.

Senator ALDRICH candidly says that he is opposed to the Administration plan for the creation of two new States because that would mean four more Democratic Senators. This is more candid than grateful to the Administration's faithful allies. How could the Administration expect to promote Democratic policies without the assistance of Democratic votes? The Administration is now engaged in redeeming some Republican promises in a most Democratic manner, and in promoting some Democratic policies in a most un-Republican manner, and it is succeeding only by the aid of Democratic allies.

There is hardly one of the Administration's proposals which would not have been stillborn but for Democratic aid, and there is hardly one which can reach the statute book without continuance of such assistance. For example, the Senate is now engaged in revising the recent Republican railway legislation, and cannot succeed without Democratic help. In a year or two, if the Republicans are left in control of the Government, it is sure that they will be revising the present perfect proposals in like manner. In the next few years the Republicans will need Democratic assistance to amend both the Wickersham Railway bill and the Dingley tariff, with all its admirable schedules. Those four Democratic Senators would be useful then, and Senator ALDRICH is making the task of his successors unnecessarily hard.

THE INEBRIATES' BILL.

The bill to establish a Board of Inebriety, now before Mayor GAYNOR for his signature, presents a remedy for an acknowledged evil. Men arrested for public intoxication lose their employment, lose their self-respect, and become confirmed drunkards and public charges because of the disgraceful treatment accorded them at the hands of the law.

A person arrested for the first time should be released when sobered, without the public humiliation of an appearance in court, or of a police record of conviction. If arrested again within a year no more should be done than to keep an eye on him, having obtained his assurance that he will not again disturb the public peace and order. Only with the third offense should a fine be imposed, to be paid if necessary by installments, and probation substituted for the workhouse. A fourth offense within a year should be construed to mean that he is in the grip of a habit that requires medical aid to break, not herding in depraved associations. Commitment to a hospital and industrial colony, such as has been established in England and in the States of Massachusetts, Iowa, and Minnesota, until he shall have lost the abnormal desire will be reformative, and will relieve the city of the expense of caring for a chronic "rounder" during the rest of his life.

This is not a paternal measure. Quite the contrary.

Said Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON in his capital speech at the Waldorf Wednesday night: "No individual that ever did or ever will exist is of any real importance in a nation of ninety millions." That is putting the case rather too strongly, but the meaning is clear. No public officer is personally as important as his office, and no Speaker of the House of Representatives is as important as the House itself, which, in its turn, is not nearly as important in any session as the millions of citizens it represents. Uncle Joe is slowly learning his lesson.

Though THACKERAY wrote about "How to Live on Nothing a Year" he laid down no workable rules. He merely showed us that Capt. and Mrs. Rawdon Crawley lived in Mayfair on nothing a year. The difficult feat has been accomplished by many others. A petition in bankruptcy just filed shows that one of our fellow-citizens has been getting food and drink, works of art, cigars, flowers, golf clubs and balls, clothes, jewels, shoes, and writing paper for nothing; and has kept up a motor car on the same basis, while physicians have cured his maladies, and dentists filled his teeth without payment, and even the austere telephone company has given him credit. He owes $24,000, and has $25. How did he do it? The secret is always the creditor's. It seems to be a rare gift, and it is probably inherent. There is an art employed in getting deeply in debt which most of us miss altogether.

Why is there so much fuss nowadays about college theatricals? Originally school plays were Greek, Latin, or English classics and their object was purely educational. The popular college play now is some trivial comedy or drama, or an imitation of the precious "musical comedy" of theatrical commerce. Generally the performances are given for the benefit of some students' fund. There is probably no more difficult or less certain way of raising money. The young men appear as girls and have their photographs taken in character. At the girls' colleges the young women play men's rôles, and the Wellesley authorities have now been compelled to forbid the display of photographs of girls in male attire. The preparations for college theatricals must occupy a great deal of the students' time. Are they worth while? There is nothing in the scope and influence of the contemporary theatre that justifies this persistent imitation of its methods and repertory in educational institutions.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Commuters Do Pay Their Way.

Introducing every announcement of an advance in commutation rates and an almost passionately eloquent feature in every discussion of them by a railway official, is the declaration that this part of the passenger service has hitherto been done at a loss. Such unanimity cannot safely be dismissed as merely the result of an agreement to misstate facts and deceive the traveling public, and yet it is hard to believe that for many years and for some mysterious reason the railway companies have been charging the commuters less than it cost to carry them. That has not been the custom of these corporations, especially in the days before they were subject to as many legal restrictions and compulsions as they are now. Moreover, judging from commercial analogy, this business has characteristics which would seem likely to make its conduct profitable, even at considerable reductions from ordinary rates. For one thing, it is extremely regular throughout the year, so that provision for it can constantly be exact. For another, it is a strictly cash business, and with the cash paid in advance at that. Commuters' trains, too, are comparatively inexpensive. They are composed of "common" cars—usually the oldest on the road—and their speed is moderate and therefore economical. They are asked to carry hardly any baggage, and the passengers are of the docile and well-behaved kind that makes no trouble. As for the lower rates which the commuters have enjoyed, they have paid for more than their monthly tickets—they have added not a little to the revenue of the freight departments. And since when have the railways abandoned the theory that it pays to do cheaply business that otherwise could not be done at all? That is a rule which they have established and maintained, and they protest bitterly when certain Western States pass laws that interfere with adjusting rates to the local capacity to pay. The commuter must travel cheaply or he cannot travel. Also, he must travel cheaply or else there will be no suburban towns, and surely it is to the interest of the railways that there should be such towns, and that they should grow and prosper. It may be that the commutation traffic is not directly profitable, but that it is so indirectly there are many reasons for believing besides the excellent one that the railways have always made provision for it and have seemed the better content the more of it they had.

More Than Kerby Implicated.

Closely connected with the question as to how the disclosure by the stenographer, KERBY, of information obtained while acting in a confidential capacity should be regarded, is one as to the moral justification of those who sought, obtained, and used that information for the furtherance of their own purposes and to the injury of KERBY'S official chief. They could hardly have been expected to refuse to hear the man's story, had it been brought to them voluntarily, and, once heard, its use was almost inevitable, whatever their opinion of the man who made the betrayal. It was quite another thing, however, when, knowing what he had done, they sent him back, or at any rate let him go back, to the office in which he was a secretly hostile and unfaithful employé.

In war, like acts are held permissible, but they are also held to be a regrettable necessity, and of the crimes which attaches to the word "spy" something is usually transferred to those who take advantage of the spy's willingness to be treacherous and mendacious. But it is only in actual, open war that "the laws are silent." The controversies of peace, less dependent upon force for settlement, are supposed to be conducted with a greater regard for the amenities of civilization, the courtesies and decencies of men living as neighbors. KERBY himself should have quitted the Department of the Interior when he found, or thought, that the work demanded of him there was such that a patriotic citizen could not do it. For him to remain there and to exploit the confidence reposed in him was at least incongruous with the delicacy of conscience which he now professes.

One of our readers, in a letter discussing this still rather tenebrous episode, asks: "Do you, in the abstract, maintain as a principle that an employé, as such, should have a rule of conduct differing from that which should govern him as a responsible individual? Does not an employé, acting under his superior's orders, become an accessory if such orders require him to depart from the strict construction of the law of right? And, having so offended, does he not perpetuate his offense by remaining silent about it, even though his speaking involve the conviction of his employer?" These are not questions to be dealt with "in the abstract," and still less is the assumption to be made that the only answer to them is the one demanded in cases at once clear and extreme. Our correspondent forgets that in the proceedings now in progress Secretary BALLINGER is not even charged with crime, but only with "improper activities"—a matter of opinion.

Trouble Over a Grave.

Up in Greenwich, a woman had a spaniel and the spaniel died. To express her sense of loss she not only had him buried in an elaborate and expensive coffin, but she gave him a grave in her cemetery lot, quite as if the dog had been "people." This manifestation of affection seems to have offended other owners of lots in that cemetery, for no sooner was the dog well buried than he was exhumed, taken out of his elaborate and expensive coffin, and removed to parts as yet unknown.

The grief of his mistress has now been turned to anger, and she vows that what she considers an act of wicked desecration shall be punished. This is truly a sad affair—sad because of the widely distributed folly which it reveals. Why was the poor dog buried where his harmless remains would be sure to offend? Why, on the other hand, should anybody be offended? Good dogs are so good! And all dogs are good dogs if they have half a chance.

TERROR IN MANHATTAN.

The Comet in 1680, Like a Blazing Sun, Startled the Dutch.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reading "The Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America," by John Fiske, I came across a passage which describes the effect the comet of 1680 had upon the minds of the people. This description is worth reproducing.

> Late in the Autumn of 1680 the good people of Manhattan were overcome with terror at a sight in the heavens such as has seldom greeted human eyes. An enormous comet, perhaps the most magnificent one on record, suddenly made its appearance. At first it was tailless and dim, like a nebulous cloud, but at the end of a week the tail began to show itself, and in a second week had attained a length of thirty degrees; in the third week it extended to seventy degrees, while the whole mass was growing brighter. After five weeks it seemed to be absorbed into the intense glare of the sun, but in four days more it reappeared like a blazing sun itself in the throes of some giant convulsion, and threw out a tail in the opposite direction as far as the whole distance between the sun and the earth. Sir Isaac Newton, who was then at work upon the mighty problems soon to be published to the world in his "Principia," welcomed this strange visitor as affording him a beautiful instance for testing the truth of his new theory of gravitation. But most people throughout the civilized world, the learned as well as the multitude, feared that the end of all things was at hand. Every church in Europe, from the grandest cathedral to the humblest chapel, resounded with supplications, and in the province of New York a day of fasting and humiliation was appointed, in order that the wrath of God might be assuaged.

But 1680 is not 1910! S. P. ADELOW.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the comet had hit us, would we not all have been put into a "comet-ose" state? This result is inferred from the symptoms shown by many of those who have been taking early observations and other things.

Singers Should Get Together.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have heard it said in the past that, though there is no dearth of English singers and musicians with cathedral and church training engaged in church work in New York and Brooklyn, there has never been much fraternal feeling among them, and they have never given themselves the opportunity to get together, as do the German singing societies, for instance. It is a pity, for Englishmen are gifted singers, and church music has a fascination for them which is profound and deep, and comes down from the times of the Benedictine and Cistercian Brotherhoods.

The present time brings out lamentably this lack of cohesion, for could they not render their chants and hymns in their inimitable manner at the services to be held downtown the day of the burial of King Edward; and at the bier of him who was a good friend to them all break this perpetual and unfruitful aloofness?

To get them together at times would be a distinct gain for the Church and Christianity in this city. Let us then hail the advent of the Anglican choir. A CHURCHMAN.

World's Fair and Staten Island.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with great interest your editorial article, "Does New York Want a World's Fair?" and must contradict your statement about Staten Island being out of the question. There are over 2,000 acres of level land, with a large frontage on the ocean, between Fort Wadsworth and New Dorp which could be utilized, being reached directly by three trolleys and two railroads, and near the direct route of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad between Chicago and St. George, N. Y. Our superb ferry services from New York to Stapleton and St. George should be taken into consideration and the short distance to the grounds.

If this fair should ever be held in Richmond Borough it would revolutionize Staten Island and its realty values and give the other boroughs of New York City a race.

Suffragist Denver Has Gone "Wet."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a current number of Harper's Bazar Mrs. Ida Husted Harper lays great stress on the connection of the vote for women with the temperance movement. It is a little unfortunate that the dispatch in last evening's papers tell us that Denver has gone "wet" by 1,500 votes. Will Mrs. Harper or some other suffrage advocate kindly explain to us how such a thing is possible in a State as blessed as Colorado with votes for women?

EVENING CLASSES FOR WOMEN

Normal College to Provide a Course Next Fall.

A plan to provide college courses for the women of the city, especially for teachers, is planned by the authorities of Normal College. If there is sufficient demand funds will be asked to start the experiment next Fall. The instruction will be given not earlier than 7 and not later than 10 o'clock in the evenings, by the heads of the departments and others of the college staff, and the courses offered will in no way be inferior to those given in the daytime.

The entrance requirements will be the regular units fixed by the Board of Regents. In the same way the A. B. degree offered will be the standard given for sixty hours of college work. Those who apply asking credit for work done at other institutions will be given credit for such work as would obtain the approval of the State Department of Education.

As outlined, the plan is to provide for two classes of students. The first is the large body of women who have completed the High School course and who are anxious to continue their studies, but are prevented from doing so by duties of some sort during the day. There is a definite demand for an opportunity to pursue courses in the modern languages, classics, English literature, history, economics, politics, sociology, mathematics, the sciences, and other branches. It is planned to offer as many and as advanced courses as the demand requires. It will be possible for a student to matriculate for one course or for several.

GIFT FOR OUTERBRIDGE.

Friends in the City Club Honor Head of Committee of 100.

Eugene H. Outerbridge, who was Chairman of the Committee of One Hundred in the municipal campaign of 1909, received at the City Club yesterday a silver centrepiece in recognition of his work in the last campaign.

In his speech presenting the gift Isaac N. Seligman said that the tact, wisdom, self-sacrifice, and courage displayed by Mr. Outerbridge in those trying days and nights had impressed the Republican Party with the necessity of compromising and selecting the very best candidates for the offices in this city.

"The selection of Messrs. McAneny, Prendergast, Mitchel, and others," Mr. Seligman said, "was made possible by the persistent and insistent tact on the part of Mr. Outerbridge, and it was thus that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment was saved from Tammany control and domination."

He added that the Mayor had agreeably disappointed those who were opposed to him in the election, and if he continued as he had been doing he would undoubtedly win the confidence of all citizens irrespective of their political affiliations.

GIVES UP SANITARIUM PLAN.

Metropolitan Life Not to Build One in Westchester County.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has withdrawn its application to the State Commissioner of Health and the local health officer of the town of Somers, in Westchester, for permission to build a sanitarium for the treatment of its tubercular employes, in deference to the sentiment expressed by the people of the City of New York in opposition to the construction of such a sanitarium within the watershed of New York City.

The company takes the position that while there can be no objection to the building of the sanitarium within the watershed based on the theory of pollution of the city water supply, it recognizes a sentimental objection on the part of a great many citizens to the erection of any public institution within the lands included in the watershed, and it prefers to locate elsewhere and thus avoid any possible public criticism.

It is announced that the company is already looking for another site, and that no time will be lost in making an application for permission to build elsewhere.

MAYOR LOSES HIS FIREMAN.

Foreman Dooley Is Recalled from the City Hall to Regular Department Duty.

Fire Commissioner Waldo, in pursuance of his policy of recalling all firemen from special detail, ordered yesterday Foreman Joseph Dooley, who has been attached to the Mayor's office for two years, to report for regular duty to-day.

Dooley's removal from the City Hall was made with the consent of the Mayor, and the Commissioner will continue the crusade until the large number of men who have been assigned to special detail during the past few years have been recalled.

Capt. Dooley will take charge this morning of Truck 62, at Central Avenue and Madison Street, Brooklyn. This house is only a short distance from his home. The Commissioner allowed him to select the place to which he should go. It is understood that Dooley obtained his assignment to the City Hall through the late Patrick H. McCarren.

FIGHT ON INCREASED RATES.

Asks Commuters to Write to the Commerce Commission.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In re matter of proposed increase in passenger commutation rates on the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad it seems that the only relief open to the large number of commuters who reside outside of the State of New York is before the Inter-State Commerce Commission. The customary procedure is for a person aggrieved to file a complaint before the commission, and the proceedings thereafter are quite similar to proceedings in the United States courts. This necessarily involves the employment of competent counsel and a very considerable sum for disbursements, a burden which is too onerous for one commuter, or even a number of commuters, to bear.

In "The Act to Regulate Commerce" the Inter-State Commerce Commission has power to institute an inquiry upon its own motion, and on behalf of several commuters the writer addressed the commission, requesting that inquiry be instituted, and in a reply received yesterday I am notified that it now has the matter under consideration.

Favorable action, however, cannot be expected unless the Inter-State Commerce Commission is convinced that the feeling against the proposed increase is general and not confined to a few, and for that reason it is earnestly requested that all commuters who are opposed to such increase address a letter immediately to said Inter-State Commerce Commission at Washington, D. C., protesting against the increase, and stating from what station the writer commutes, the present rate, and the amount of the proposed increase.

All the danger of such play—
Modern Science we defy!
Dear old Grimm, lend all your glories

FOURTH AVE. SUBWAY ROUTE FOUND FAULTY

Service Commissioners Maltbie and Bassett File Report Describing Defects.

CONTRACTS HAVE BEEN LET

Protesting Commissioners Say Plan Wastes $5,000,000 in Easements and Traffic at Bridge Will Be Choked.

Incidental to a letter from the Public Service Commission to the Board of Estimate yesterday regarding a proposed shift of 10 feet in the course of the Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, Subway where it passes through Ashland Place, between Fourth Avenue and the Flatbush Avenue extension, a vigorous memorandum by Commissioners Maltbie and Bassett became public. The two Commissioners have opposed from the start the Fourth Avenue route as planned. In the memorandum referred to here they declare that the entire scheme of that Subway under which contracts have been let was going to be needlessly expensive and impractical from an operating point of view.

The commission has always been divided three to two on the Fourth Avenue Subway so far as routes are concerned. Chairman Willcox and Commissioners Mc-Carroll and Eustis constituting the majority. As it stands the protest of Commissioners Maltbie and Bassett cannot accomplish any practical ends, particularly now that the contracts have been let, for the majority of the commission, while recognizing the possibility of changing the contracts for construction by agreement with the contractors and the contractors' sureties, does not consider the question of route an open one.

A good deal of attention, nevertheless, was attracted by the memorandum filed by the dissenting Commissioners, who argue that the existing plan of sending traffic from both the Fourth Avenue and the Broadway-Lafayette Avenue Subways in Brooklyn into the four tracks running down the Flatbush Avenue extension and over the Manhattan Bridge would cause a general choking of traffic and seriously interfere with the profitable operation of any of the Brooklyn lines. The reason for the shift in the Ashland Place section of the subway, which the majority of the commission propose to the Board of Estimate, is that the present layout in Ashland Place will be dangerous to the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

In their dissenting memorandum Commissioners Maltbie and Bassett say:

"The Fourth Avenue Subway as now laid out is unnecessarily expensive, is lacking in expected capacity, and will prove an embarrassment for all time to Brooklyn and lower Manhattan. Fortunately the construction has not yet progressed so far that it is too late. The extravagant cost of this subway layout occurs between the corner of Flatbush and Fourth Avenues and Fulton Street and Flatbush Avenue, where, instead of going direct it is forced through Ashland Place and Fulton Street, taking two wide turns and requiring the use of a very large amount of private real estate.

"Ashland Place is only 50 feet wide, and to let the subway through all the buildings on the westerly side of this street will need to be torn down for two blocks. As it swings into Fulton Street the entire building frontage on the southerly side of Fulton Street, between Ashland Place and Rockwell Place, will be destroyed. On the northerly side of Fulton Street all of the buildings will be destroyed for a distance of two blocks. This destruction of buildings and taking of private real estate is far greater than was originally expected, and if it had been anticipated would probably have been sufficient to have caused the line to be placed elsewhere.

"The cross section of the present Subway is larger than that planned by the Rapid Transit Board, thus increasing the depth and width. The result is that a subway originally designed to pass through the public streets is now too large to be contained within the streets, and to make room for it the buildings along the subway, where land is very valuable, must be torn down and private land purchased. The cost to the city from destruction of buildings, need of easements in private property, and excessive depth will probably amount to $5,000,000. In other words, the detour through Ashland Place and Fulton Street will make the expense about $5,000,000 more than it would be if a straight layout near the surface could be obtained. This detour is necessary because the Fourth Avenue subway is planned to go under and across the line of the present Interborough Subway.

"The worst feature of the present layout, however, is that the subway when completed will lack the capacity in Flatbush Avenue extension and on Manhattan Bridge to carry the traffic that is being planned to pour into it. The Manhattan Bridge will accommodate four rapid transit tracks. Flatbush Avenue extension at its throat is planned to contain the same number. Those four tracks feed into four tracks upon the Manhattan side of the bridge—two going west in Canal Street and two south via Centre Street to City Hall Park. If the traffic be equally divided between these two lines they will not limit the capacity of the tracks over the bridge. But by far the greater number of persons will wish to go south to City Hall. Consequently many more trains will need to be run through the Centre Street line than through the Canal Street line, and the two tracks to City Hall will become the limiting factors.

"The four tracks in Flatbush Avenue extension will ultimately be called upon to take care of express and local trains from Fort Hamilton and Staten Island, express and local trains from Coney Island, express and local trains from Lafayette Avenue, and local trains from the two-track turnout already constructed in Flatbush Avenue. The Manhattan Bridge and the Flatbush Avenue extension simply cannot take care of all these future lines without restricting the use of each of them, just as the Brooklyn Bridge now restricts the use of each elevated road that leads to it. The result will be that the Fort Hamilton, Staten Island, Coney Island, and Lafayette Avenue subways can be used in only a portion of their capacity so long as the line in the Flatbush Avenue extension is the only outlet.

"Whatever affects capacity affects future earning ability. If, for instance, the Lafayette Avenue subway in the future is compelled to run trains four minutes apart instead of two minutes apart, because of congestion at the Manhattan Bridge, the future net earnings of that line will be very greatly reduced.

"Some have pointed out that there is a way to obviate this choking by building a subway south of the Chambers Street station in Manhattan through William Street to Old Slip, thence under the East River, up Montague Street in Brooklyn, and through Willoughby Street to its intersection with Flatbush Avenue extension. But William Street is in places not more than thirty-nine feet wide, whereas a typical two-track section of the Fourth Avenue Subway is thirty-one and a half feet wide, exclusive of stations. The Appellate Division on the 12th day of March, 1907, refused to sanction a subway route in lower William Street on account of damage to abutting buildings, narrowness of the street, and the presence of quicksand. Likewise on the 25th day of January, 1907, the Appellate Division of the Second Department refused to sanction a subway in Montague Street.

"The Fourth Avenue Subway should be turned down Atlantic Avenue and under the East River to the Battery, where it should become a part of the Broadway-Lexington Avenue Subway. This simple change would make possible a southern subway system wholly south of Fulton Street, a central subway system, consisting of the Interborough, with possible extensions out Flatbush Avenue, Eastern Parkway, and to Flatbush, and a northern subway system composed of the Lafayette Avenue Subway and its branches to Ridgewood and East New York.

"The trunk portion of the northerly subway system would enter Brooklyn's business district through Lafayette Avenue, turn into Fulton Street, and thence run through Flatbush Avenue extension and across Manhattan Bridge. When enlarged to a four-track line, it would have abundant capacity, and a branch straight out Fulton Street would not be precluded. If the Fourth Avenue Subway is constructed as now planned, riders desiring to go north or south in Manhattan must change cars at the corner of Canal Street and Broadway, to become part of the rush traffic on the Broadway-Lexington Avenue Subway every night and morning, whereas via an Atlantic Avenue tunnel they would go in the opposite direction to the Manhattan traffic, and by rides, would not need to change cars."

PLAY STREET GAMES ON WALDORF ROOF

Children Delight Society with "Hop-Scotch" and "Have You My Sheep?"

FOR PLAY GUILD BENEFIT

Characteristic Touches of Realism That Were Not Expected—An Indian Play, Pantomime, and Spectacle.

The children of old Greenwich Village, under the leadership of Miss Katharine Lord, head worker of Greenwich Settlement House, invaded the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday afternoon and presented three little "dramatic interludes" before a good-sized audience of uptown people gathered on the roof of the hotel to see how the other half plays. The performance was for the benefit of the Greenwich District Branch of the Guild of Play, which needs the services of "an athletic young man, in fact, a very athletic young man," as one of the settlement workers put it, to organize the street games among the boys this coming Summer.

Both boys and girls took part in the programme, the first number of which was a group of street games, intended to show the audience some of the forms of play adapted for the crowded downtown streets. The games were to be perfectly spontaneous and natural, but it is probable that some of the touches of realism that ensued were not intentional.

First came two little girls, official markers for the "hop-scotch," who drew patterns in chalk all over the sacred flooring of the Waldorf-Astoria, beaming blissful smiles the while. Then the second marker, observing the lines already made, exclaimed: "Oh, gee, you'se ain't drawed 'em straight!" and proceeded to erase the same in primitive fashion. Next the second marker glowered at the first, "Mrs. Walker said I was to go first." To this challenge the other replied with equal firmness, but a warning voice from behind the scenes set both to "hop-scotching" without further combat, except for "Look but where yer goin'!" and "Get out of my way!" whenever the jumpers met on the course.

Hoppers Perform with Vigor.

Once started, however, the hoppers performed with vigor and certainty, to the delight of the audience. Next came ring games, with a group of little girls playing "Have you seen my sheep?" and something which kindergartners call "Day and night," which, however, looks like a game of tag, with everybody "it" at once.

The first dramatic effort followed—an Indian interlude—entitled "The Dance of Peace." At the rear of the roof space used as a stage was a fine glowing wood fire, thanks to a few red electric light bulbs. To the right stood a hand-painted tepee, big enough to hold maybe three warriors at once.

On to the stage came the Mohawk tribe, one by one, cautiously looking from side to side for the enemy, or wriggling near the ground. When the rest of the tribe had gathered around the campfire, in stalked the three elders of the tribe, with the chief Great Bear, who had no less than ten feathers in his hair, each one a different color. The plot was simple. The envoy of the Saginaws approached, and instead of tomahawking him, or setting him afire, they invite his chief Big Eagle to a peace dance. The peace ceremonies were then performed in first-rate style, save that no one was permitted to smoke the peace pipe.

A pantomime followed, called "In the Dolls' Shop," which tells how the fairies came to the toy shop and enchanted the dolls, so that they fall a-dancing. The screens were removed, and on the stage stood the dolls, a baby doll, an Indian squaw, a negro mammy, a French doll, a German doll, and so on, with the little storekeeper, who brushes them off and puts them on the shelf for the night. The audience was requested to conjure up the darkness for themselves. The fairy queen in pink and white, eight little attendants in green, and a very plump short one in yellow, dance in and cast the magic spells, singing as they go. Then the dolls begin to dance the folk-dances of the various countries.

The chief spectacle, however, was "The Triumph of Summer." First came Spring and the West Winds, nine little girls in green, scattering seeds (confetti) as they danced. Then the East Wind and the Raindrops appeared, in gray-cloud robes, with shining tinsel rivulets flowing from their hair. First the rain drops came down smash-bang, as the music went rapidly, and then they slowed, so it was just like a stream from a watering pot. As a result of these ministrations the grass began to spring, and it sprang very actively, too. Daffodils in green and yellow followed, only to be withered by Jack Frost and his sprites. These were tiny bits of boys, with white smocks over their street clothes, decorated with silver baubles.

Summer Drives Jack Frost Away.

Finally, in danced Summer and drove Jack Frost and all the little Frosts away. Summer, a taller girl under a pink parasol trimmed with May pole streamers, and, with her eight attendants all in pink, was indeed gorgeous to look upon, and Summer had a new pair of tan shoes, with colored tops and tassels, in which to do a solo dance. Meanwhile, one of Spring's flowers had fallen into the hands of an Indian near by, who stuck it in his buttonhole. "Look at what I got, Katie," yelled Chief Big Eagle.

Whereupon the drooping daffodil lifted her head and responded: "Well, you just wait till this is over, and you'll see what you get."

"Oh, my dear!" ejaculated a sweet little old lady in the front row, overhearing this stage aside. "Do those cute little children talk like that?"

"I may say," responded a settlement worker behind, sotto voce, "it'll be mighty lucky if they don't hear anything worse than that."

After Summer had triumphed and all the uptown people had departed to the tearoom for refreshments, the performers emerged in their street clothes, and the Waldorf waiters lined up with tray after tray of ice cream and cake, a treat from one of the ladies interested. There were second helpings, too. By this time the boys had discovered the superiority of nice smooth tiles to asphalt, with the "cops" driving you off, anyway. Seated on the slippery flooring and twining their ankles around each other, the boys started sitting races, two by two, each couple working their arms like a hand car. "Hully gee!" exclaimed Chief Great Bear, as he won the race, "de Waldorf is great!"

TOWNSEND INVITATIONS OUT.

Simple Wedding for Daughter of Mrs. Richard Townsend and Peter G. Gerry

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Mrs. Richard Townsend to-day issued invitations to the marriage of her daughter, Miss Mathilde Townsend, and Peter Goelet Gerry on May 26 at noon. The ceremony will take place at the Townsend home, on Massachusetts Avenue, and be attended by only a small circle of relatives and personal friends. The wedding gown has arrived from Paris, having been made by the artist of clothes who has dressed Miss Townsend from her school days, but is by no means the gorgeous lace robe already much described. By the desire of the bride-to-be the arrangements for the wedding will be marked by great simplicity.

The Minister from Spain and Mme. Riano, who have been the guests of Mrs. Townsend since their arrival here, have taken possession of the legation on New Hampshire Avenue, the furniture from Copenhagen, where the Minister formerly was stationed, having arrived yesterday.

Milbank-Fowler Wedding Plans.

At the wedding of Miss Katharine Fowler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Powell Fowler, and Dunlevy Milbank, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Milbank, which takes place on June 1 in St. James's Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, the bride's attendants will be her sister, Mrs. Francis F. Palmer, who will act as matron of honor, and her two other sisters, Miss Ruth and Miss Eleanor Fowler; also Miss Esther McCullough, Miss Ethel Spears, Miss Ruth Haskins, and Miss Margaret Schulze of St. Paul. Jeremiah Milbank is to be his brother's best man, and his ushers will include Francis F. Palmer, Vivian Spencer, Morris Groves, Frederick Lockman, and Emmet Harris. Mr. Milbank will give his bachelor dinner on May 27 at Delmonico's, and Mrs. Milbank will entertain the bridal party next Wednesday in the Annex of the Metropolitan Club.

Benefit for Church of Presentation.

A concert and vaudeville entertainment will be given at the Gotham Theatre, Brooklyn, on Saturday, for the benefit of the Church of the Presentation, which was destroyed by fire on May 8. The theatre, with the lights and music, has been donated by Percy G. Williams, and the professional talent will be supplied by Dave Henderson, the Coney Island manager. A feature of the entertainment will be "The Village School," presented by members of the Invincible Club of Brooklyn.

LACKAWANNA RAISES WAGES.

Ends Dispute with Firemen by Giving Them 12 Per Cent. More.

SCRANTON, Penn., May 19.—Supt. Lloyd of the motive power department of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company and the Grievance Committee of the Lackawanna firemen have settled the wage controversy. The firemen get an increase which averages 12 per cent., and dates from May 1. Some of the men gain more by the advance than others, according to the rate of wages they received before the increase was made.

Men working on suburban lines were paid much less than the men working on the main line, but they gain more proportionately, their salaries being so regulated that they are now on the same basis as the main line employes.

PARIS APPLAUDS METROPOLITAN OPERA

Public Rehearsal of "Aida" at the Chatelet a Triumph for Director Gatti-Casazza.

TOSCANINI GETS OVATION

Caruso, Emmy Destinn, and Louise Sohmer Showered with Plaudits—Ambassador Bacon in Audience.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 19.—The public rehearsal of "Aida" to-night at the Chatelet was a great triumph for the Metropolitan Opera Company, and especially for Gatti-Casazza, its director. As critical an audience as could be gotten together in Paris showered the singers and musicians with plaudits, and a remarkable ovation was given to Arturo Toscanini, the musical chief, whose conducting of Verdi's masterpiece was said to be one of the best ever witnessed in Paris.

Caruso, in the rôle of Rhadames, was in excellent voice, and with Emmy Destinn as Aida, Amato as Amonasro, and Louise Homer as Amneris, was received with most cordial enthusiasm. Indeed the admiration of the audience was so intense that it sometimes filled the air with bravos at inopportune moments, marring certain of the more delicate lyrical passages. Caruso and the other principal artists were recalled again and again.

The list of distinguished persons present would fill a column, but among them were Premier Briand and several of the other French Cabinet Ministers, Ambassador Bacon, Signor Tittoni, the Italian Ambassador; the Directors of the National Opera and Opera Comique, Princess Murat, Duchesse D'Uzes, and editors and musical critics of all the leading Paris journals.

The placing of the opera on the stage of the Chatelet in time for to-night's performance was really a most remarkable tour de force, as disheartening material difficulties were encountered, but the scenic effects were, nevertheless, superb. The first regular performance of "Aida" for the public will be given on Saturday night.

OWNERS AND PRODUCERS JOIN

Two Associations Agree to Eliminate "Graft" and Adjust Disputes.

Another meeting of the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers was held in the office in the Times Building yesterday, at which was present representatives of the National Theatre Owners' Association, consisting of John Cort, J. J. Coleman, Albert Wels, C. P. Walker, and Jake Wells. The delegation from the Theatre Owners stated the objects and plans of their association, and pledged that association to join with the Producing Managers in the elimination of evils pertaining to the theatre business.

The meeting ended without dispute and with an agreement on the part of both associations. The Theatre Owners pledged themselves to fair dealing in every respect without discrimination against any producing manager regardless of his affiliations. The two associations agreed to adopt means to eliminate alleged "graft" in theatre management, producing, and booking of plays, both bodies pledging themselves to maintain the theatre owner as a free agent in the theatrical world.

It was decided that a committee from both associations be appointed to have full power to settle disputes if any should arise between the members of the associations as to terms demanded by either party, or any complaints of either side. It is the intention of this committee to eliminate lawsuits and to provide for the immediate adjustment of all disputes.

This committee was also directed to prepare a report upon a full plan of operation between the two organizations. This committee will act upon plans for co-operation between the two associations, which will otherwise remain separate.

A meeting of the joint committee will be held to-night at the rooms of the Producing Managers' Association in the Times Building to work upon plans for the two bodies.

No statement of any sort came out yesterday from the offices of Klaw & Erlanger or any of the syndicate producers who resigned from the Producing Managers' Association last week, and were expelled at a meeting held day before yesterday. Henry B. Harris, William Harris, and Jesse L. Lasky, the three members to whom two weeks was allowed in which to answer certain charges brought against them by the association, have not returned to the city.

Benefit for Deprived Violinist.

A great misfortune has befallen Maurice Nitke the young Polish violinist. His instrument has been stolen, and his instrument is his all. He must have another violin, and to obtain one for him so that his career may be continued, some friends and admirers of his art have arranged a benefit performance in his behalf at Carnegie Hall Thursday, Oct. 27. This date was chosen in order that distinguished singers connected with the Metropolitan Opera Company might give their valuable assistance. Meanwhile, C. R. Macauley, 21 Spruce Street, will receive subscriptions. Those signing the appeal for Mr. Nitke include Capt. Rhinelander Waldo, Fire Commissioner.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

"Lulu's Husbands," at Maxine Elliott's Theatre, will close to-night instead of Saturday night, so that the company may open in Chicago on Sunday evening at the Grand Opera House.

Wagenhals & Kemper yesterday denied the report that they intended to give up the Astor Theatre. They have been approached by the McVickar Realty Company, they said, who offered them $80,000 a year for the house, which offer they rejected. They have renewed their lease for a term of ten years with a privilege of extending it for a like period.

A colt about the size of an ordinary house cat arrived at the Hippodrome yesterday, the offspring of one of the ponies that is used in the midget circus. The mother is only twenty-six inches high. The newcomer will be shown on the stage during the rest of the performances of the season.

Margaret Anglin yesterday notified Liebler & Co. that she had engaged George Riddle of Cambridge to supervise the details of her production of the Plumtre version of Sophocles's "Antigone" at the University of California next July. Miss Anglin has received from Percy Anderson, an English archæologist, the designs for the costumes to be worn in the production.

"Love's Understudy," the character sketch successfully produced at the Lyceum Theatre on May 3, will open as a vaudeville attraction on May 23 in Syracuse. "Love's Understudy" will be a headliner at the Fifth Avenue the week of June 6. Ethel Browning, Winifred Veorbees and Rockliffe Fellowes are in the cast.

The season of "The Spitfire" at the Lyceum Theatre will end on May 28, and will be produced on tour at the conclusion of Charles Cherry's contract with the Shuberts, who hold his services for next season. The Lyceum will remain closed until August.

Five hundred clergymen, representing nearly every denomination in New York City, attended the special matinee of "The Fortune Hunter" at the Galety Theatre yesterday afternoon. Prof. Brander Matthews of Columbia University and the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer occupied boxes. After the performance many of the guests went on the stage to meet John Barrymore.

A benefit for Ernest Jarrold ("Mickey Finn") will be given at a Broadway theatre early in June by his friends in the theatrical clubs and the [illegible] actors and actresses [illegible]

NEW SITE FOR ARMORY.

Unfinished Half of Jerome Park Basin May Be Eighth Regiment's Home.

The Executive Committee of the Armory Board, consisting of the Mayor, the Controller, and the President of the Board of Aldremen, will recommend to that body on Monday that the proposed new armory for the Eighth Regiment, Coast Artillery, N. G. N. Y., be built in the southeast corner of the unused half of the Jerome Park reservoir. If this action is taken, and there is expected to be not the slightest objection, a part of a piece of property which has long been an eyesore in the Bronx, will be devoted to some practical use.

It is proposed to take thirteen and three-quarters acres of the ground for the armory site, running 1,000 feet on Jerome Avenue and 600 feet of Kingsbridge Road. This is only a small part of the entire plot, which is 185 acres in area.

There has been an agitation for some time for a new armory for the Eighth Regiment. At present it occupies the armory in East Ninety-fourth Street, between Madison and Park Avenues, with Squadron A. Both organizations have outgrown their quarters, and the Armory Board has been considering for some time the turning of the whole of the present structure over to the squadron.

Last year a bill was passed by the Legislature authorizing the city to build an armory for the Eighth Regiment in Crotona Park. This raised much objection, and the plan was fought strenuously, THE TIMES taking a prominent part in the contest. The fight was successful, Mayor McClellan vetoing the bill.

The history of the vacant plot, the corner of which it is now proposed to take for the armory, is one of the most interesting in recent New York City contracting. The 229 acres comprising the old Jerome Park race track were bought by the city in the early nineties for some $3,000,00 and turned over to the old Aqueduct Commission for a site for one of the Croton Aqueduct reservoirs. In July, 1895, the contract for the work was let to John B. McDonald, afterward the principal contractor for the construction of the Subway, at $5,478,000.

The westerly basin of the reservoir, covering ninety-four acres, was constructed, and work begun on the easterly basin. Most of the excavating was done and a large amount of material, including broken stone, &c., was brought and carted to the ground. Finally, in 1906, work was scspended.

Up to that time the reservior had cost the city $10,286,000, nearly twice the figure of the original contract. Since then the ground has remained an unsightly and barren hole. Even the derricks were left standing, although to-day they are rotting and toppling over.

When Mayor Gaynor came into office he removed the members of the old Aqueduct Commission and appointed new men, with instructions to wind up the affairs of the body as soon as possible. By an act of the Legislature, recently passed and approved by the Mayor, the commission will pass out of existence on June 1, its functions going to the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity.

The Sinking Fund Commission asked recently for a report from all the city departments on the property in their jurisdiction lying idle, and will doubtless soon take steps for the disposal of these parcels. Among them the principal will be this unused half of the Jerome Park Reservoir. It has been estimated that in spite of the fact that for most purposes a costly filling-in process would be necessary, the land would bring in the market at least $5,000,000, taking into consideration the increase in the value of the surrounding property, which has been exceedingly large since the construction of the Subway and the planning of a new one.

If part of the site is used for an armory an extensive filling-in process will be unnecessary, as one of the requisites for such a building is a large, deep basement.

SUFFRAGISTS NOT PATRIOTS

Says Women's Civic League in Opposing Decoration Day Plans.

The National League for the Civic Education of Women went on record yesterday as protesting against the plan of the suffragists to decorate on Decoration Day the graves of the women who devoted their lives to the cause of woman suffrage.

"It is announced," said Helen Kendrick Johnson, on behalf of the organization, "that the suffrage associations are to use the day that has been set apart for the commemoration of the men who laid down their lives in defense of the Republic as the one in which to put a travesty of the National flag on the graves of those who devoted their lives to the cause of woman suffrage.

"This is so grotesque that it might well pass unnoticed by the opposers of woman suffrage were it not for the fact that there is a serious aspect to the suffrage movement, as it relates to patriotism, which should neither be ignored nor go unrebuked.

"It is said the principal graves to be decorated with the farcical ensign of suffrage will be those of Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony. What deeds of their patriotism and self-sacrifice will it commemorate? Not one.

"Patriotic women and their descendants cannot now see, without a brief but earnest protest, the attempt that is being made by suffragists to glean from the solemn service of the Republic remembrance something of notoriety in aid of a cause whose leaders were not numbered among the loyal and self-sacrificing women at the time of the Republic's sorest need."

CAUSE OF CUBAN DISASTER.

Carpenter Started to Nail Lid on Case of Dynamite—35 Dead.

HAVANA, May 19.—Already twenty-eight bodies have been recovered from the ruins of the barracks at Pinar del Rio, which, together with the officers' quarters and other structures, were blown up yesterday afternoon by the explosion of thousands of pounds of dynamite. The latest official returns received here indicate that the total fatalities may not exceed thirty-five. The injured numbered 143, of whom two have died in the hospital. The injuries of the majority of the others are not considered serious.

Capt. Betancour of the Rural Guard, who was previously reported dead, escaped, the only officers killed being Capt. Alfredo Ravena and Lieut. Dihigo, who perished with their families quartered in the barracks.

The dead include Charles Fells, an American surveyor in the Department of Public Works; several clerks, and four women stenographers in the same department. The others are non-commissioned officers and privates of two troops of Rural Guards and a few civil employes.

The disaster is declared to be due to the carelessness of a carpenter in repairing defective cases of dynamite which were being loaded on a wagon for transport to the railway station. The carpenter was in the act of nailing the lid on a broken case when the dynamite exploded, detonating the rest of the dynamite on the wagon and instantly killing all in the courtyard and blowing down the wall of an adjacent storeroom, in which the remainder of the dynamite was deposited. This caused a second explosion, completing the destruction of the buildings. The carpenter's head was found a quarter of a mile away from the scene of the explosion.

The majority of the victims were buried this afternoon, the bodies being taken to the cemetery under an escort of Rural Guards, a great concourse of citizens attending the ceremony.

The President has canceled the ball fixed for Saturday next in commemoration of the eighth anniversary of Cuba's independence.

NEW WINTER GARDEN NEAR TIMES SQUARE

Lew Fields's Theatre to be Erected on Site of the American Horse Exchange.

BUILDING TO COST $500,000

Garden to be Devoted to Musical and Spectacular Productions—Shuberts to be the Managers.

Plans were filed yesterday for the erection of a new building on the site of the American Horse Exchange, on Broadway, Seventh Avenue, and Fiftieth Street, near Times Square. This property was leased recently by a company in which the Shuberts are largely interested. This firm announced yesterday that the new building would be used for a Winter garden, to be known as Lew Field's Winter Garden, to be conducted along the lines of the Wintergarten, Berlin, and the Empire, London.

Work will begin at an early date, and the place will be ready for opening by the first of next January. It will be one of several new amusement houses to be erected in the neighborhood of Times Square before the middle of the next theatrical season, and will be nearly in the centre of the new theatre and restaurant district that is being developed.

The property on which the building will stand is owned by William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and a few months ago it was leased to the Fiftieth Street and Broadway Company, of which William H. Chesbrough is President, and in which the Shuberts have large interests.

The Shuberts will have a theatre of their own in the immediate neighborhood, a few doors from William A. Brady's new playhouse that is being erected on Forty-eighth Street, near Seventh Avenue. Churchill's new restaurant will be only one block away, and recently announced plans indicate that there will be other restaurants and hotels erected in the same neighborhood before the end of next Winter.

Lew Fields's Winter Garden will be devoted to musical and spectacular offerings. The plans for the building call for an expenditure of $500,000, and include provisions for a stage 88 feet wide.

JANE NORIA SAILS FOR PARIS.

Soprano Hopes to See a Real American Opera House Here Soon.

Jane Noria, the American soprano, who has been singing during the past season at the Metropolitan Opera House, sailed yesterday for Paris on the Provence.

"I hope," she said, "to see a real American opera house here in the near future. It is absurd that Americans should listen to opera in French, German, and Italian. In Berlin all operas are sung in German; in Milan all operas are sung in Italian, and in Paris all operas are sung in French. Then and only then opera will reach the heart of the people, when they can understand the words, know what is really happening on the stage.

"During the recent tour of the opera company I talked with prominent men all over the United States in regard to this matter, and there is no doubt in my mind that America will have its own opera house within a short time, where one may hear the operas of all nations, but in English.

"For the success of this scheme it is necessary that everything be of the very best, but as all of the best singers agree with me it will not be difficult to get great singers. Then America is full of beautiful voices. Why should all these young men and girls have to learn other languages in order to sing in opera?

"The establishment of an American opera company would do more for art in this country than anything else I can think of. Then and only then will music have a chance to grow on this soil."

Arthur Hammerstein also sailed on the Provence. He will join his father in Paris.

ENDS HIS LIFE IN OLD AGE.

Carpenter Lost His Job and Learned He Was Too Old to Get Another.

Three notes found in his gas-filled room on the fourth floor of a boarding house kept by Mrs. Mary Dodger, at 323 West 124th Street, when the other boarders broke into it last night, told the little tragedy of Everett L. Britton, 63 years old, a carpenter, who lay dead across his couch there.

The notes were much alike. One was addressed to his landlady, inclosing $3 and acknowledging a further debt of $15, which he regretted his inability to pay before he died. The second was addressed "To the Coroner," and the third to Fred Hulberg, an undertaker of 265 West 125th Street, whom he had known for nearly twenty years.

"I am an old man," wrote Britton. "I tried to save for my old age. But sickness lost me my job, and they tell me I am too old to get another. I have no money and no work. The new generation cannot bother about me, and I have no wife or child to miss me when I am dead."

To the undertaker he willed his chest of tools and a life insurance policy for $156, which he had paid for at the rate of a few cents each week. He asked Hulberg to pay for his burial with this and to turn over whatever might remain to his landlady in settlement of what he owed her. Hulberg said he had known Britton as a sober and industrious man.

Jennie A. Guion, who died Feb. 3 last in Grace Hospital, 414 East Thirteenth Street, left all her property to Grace Church. Her will was filed yesterday by George H. She told persons in the hospital before her death that her maiden name was Jennie A. Taylor, and that she was born at Americus, Ga. She married Harry D. Guion, an actor, and bore him four sons and one daughter, all of whom she declared were dead. Guion deserted her, she said, and she had not seen him since 1889.

BERKELEY RUNS OFF WITH HARLEM STAKES

Victor in Belmont Park Feature and Sea Cliff Only Winners Not at Odds On.

Disappointment and compensation for it were strangely mixed in the racing at the Belmont Park race course yesterday. The two horses, in separate races, that looked to be the best of their fields and the surest winners of the day were both beaten, but as an offset four odds-on favorites, each at the same post odds of 5 to 3 on, romped home first, an afternoon's racing that would require a long search through the records for a parallel.

The two beaten favorites both stood out prominently over the fields that opposed them, Rose Queen, in the six furlongs, handicap, second on the card, and Pretend, in the stake feature, the Harlem, with selling conditions, at one mile.

The weather was fine and the track good and fast, but with all the favor of conditions the attendance was barely up to the average, and horse owners scratched right and left with the result that fairly promising fields were reduced to very one-sided contests, with four horses running in each of three events, five starters in another and six each in the two largest fields of the day.

The conditions were so peculiar as to arouse the attention of race-track managers, who in general were of the opinion that the fault rested with the owners and trainers of the horses. One veteran turfman, now prominently identified with the management of turf affairs, gave it as his opinion that the root of the trouble was the very general plan adopted by wealthy and liberal patrons of the turf and owners of big stables. He thought they did not give a sufficient amount of personal attention to the management of the stables and left entirely too much executive power with their trainers, who would scratch or run a horse to suit their own whims, ideas, or perhaps, profit, if they saw a horse in a race that they might believe could beat the horse of their employer. It was only a suggestion from the critic of conditions that the trainers who entered and did not start their horses might make a profit for themselves by backing the horse they considered the best, after contention had in part been removed by the withdrawal of the horses owned by their employers. The charge was not made against the trainers as a class, for many of them are men of long-established integrity in their business dealings and quite a number are men who, in the strict pursuit of their calling have accumulated comfortable fortunes. The evil, according to the critic of the professional horsemen's tactics at present, rested chiefly with those who are trainers and managers of public stables, in which the horses of numerous owners, unable or unwilling to maintain exclusive stables of their own, keep their horses.

Berkeley easily won the Harlem Stakes, the feature of the day's racing. The summaries:

Famous Trotter Barney Dead.

Chicago Cannot Stop Wrestling Bout.

CHICAGO, May 19.—The Superior Court to-day overruled the city's demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel Mayor Busse to issue a permit for the holding of the Gotch and Zbyszko wrestling match on Memorial Day. On motion of the city, the entering of an order throwing out the city's demurrer was deferred until to-morrow morning. Then the city will decide whether to allow the match to take place as scheduled or carry the controversy to a higher court. Club officers believe that Mayor Busse will make no further attempt to prevent the bout.

BOXING AND WRESTLING.

The Kaufman-Langford twenty-round fight, scheduled for June 11 in San Francisco, has been postponed to June 18 because Kaufman sent word he could not be ready at an earlier date.

Jem Driscoll, English featherweight champion, has challenged Ad Wolgast for the lightweight championship. The fighter is ready to post a $5,000 forfeit, the latter to go as a side bet. Driscoll is willing to make 133 pounds at the ringside and will be ready to fight Wolgast ten or forty-five rounds four weeks before he meets Abe Attell.

Zybszko, the Pole, Wednesday night easily defeated De Rouen, the Frenchman, two straight falls at Montreal. The first fall was secured in 36 minutes with a reverse body hold. De Rouen hit the mat so hard that he was unconscious for two minutes. A front body hold won the second fall and match in 15 minutes.

"Un occasion" the French would call such a sale.

MINISTERS STRIVE TO PREVENT FIGHT

District Attorney Fickert Not Likely to Try to Stop Bout in San Francisco.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.—Real estate men are flocking into the offices of Rickard and Gleason with offers of available sites for the Jeffries-Johnson fight. The same answer has been given to all, that the question is still in abeyance, and there is no hurry. It is evident from the way offers have been received there will be no lack of places for holding the fight.

Assurance has come from Supervisor John L. Hergem, Chairman of Police Committee, that no obstacles are expected in the way of granting the permit. The application of the Broadway Club for a July permit will come before the board next Monday, and in the regular course will be referred to the Police Committee. If there is a favorable recommendation, the board can act finally on the following Monday.

District Attorney Fickert to-day received a delegation of clergymen and others, who protested against holding the fight in this city, and urged Fickert to prevent the contest. Fickert promised to look up the law and give them an answer to-morrow. As an ordinance provides for glove contests, there is no doubt that Fickert will treat the matter as Gov. Gillett does—as a sporting event that comes within the law and cannot be legally prevented.

After the boxing performance he went through yesterday, Jack Johnson went back to his road work to-day. With his trainers the champion legged it over twelve miles of park roads. For two hours he took things leisurely. Later he took a spin in his racing automobile.

BEN LOMOND, Cal., May 19.—In a telegram, James J. Corbett informed Jeffries to-day that he would leave New York for the training camp Saturday, and expected to reach Ben Lomond a week from then. Jeffries replied, expressing his pleasure at the prospect of Corbett's coming.

Jeffries spent the day fishing, and many persons who came to his training camp to see him do his usual training work were disappointed.

PAPKE SCORES A KNOCKOUT.

Joe Thomas Defeated in Sixteenth Round in Fight in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.—Billy Papke knocked out Joe Thomas in the sixteenth round of their fight to-night at Coffroth's Dreamland Arena, which was scheduled to go twenty rounds.

After two tame rounds, Papke in the third drove in several uppercuts to the jaw and rushed Thomas about the ring. There was much clinching and the crowd hissed the fighters repeatedly.

In the fifth round Papke staggered the Californian, landing a vicious right on the jaw that sent Thomas reeling against the ropes. Thomas did somewhat better in the sixth, but was bleeding at the nose.

In a mild rally in the eighth round Thomas whipped in several good body punches. Thomas improved as the fight progressed and landed several wicked punches in the tenth round.

After Papke had swung two rights to the stomach in the eleventh, the Californian jolted his right hard to the jaw, forcing Papke to break ground. Thomas followed up with a wicked left hook to the jaw that gave him the advantage of the round.

In the twelfth Papke forced his opponent against the ropes and landed four times with right on the head without return. Papke continuously used his head, which he rammed against the Californian's face and chest.

A midring rally in the thirteenth round found Thomas landing repeatedly on the face with short-arm lefts and Papke bleeding from the mouth as they separated from a clinch. Then followed a heavy exchange of rights to the body, and Thomas sent Papke reeling against the ropes with rights and lefts to the jaw as the gong sounded.

In the fifteenth Thomas drove Papke against the ropes with a fierce rush, and then nearly dropped his antagonist with a vicious right to the jaw.

Papke sent Thomas to the floor in the sixteenth with a right hook to the stomach. Thomas came up and was again floored with a right cross to the jaw. Papke went after his victim like a tiger, planting right and left to the jaw. Thomas went crashing to the floor for the third time and lay until counted out.

Dixie Kid Knocks Out West.

Four rounds of what was to have been a ten-round fight at the Sharkey A. C. last night was sufficient time for Dixie Kid to knock out Billy West, or, to be more literal, it took but three and a half rounds. The negro fighter toyed with the white man for two rounds, then became a bit angry at West's tantalizing left jab, and felled the latter twice in the third round. It was only the bell which saved West from a knockout. Dixie Kid caught him with a hard left uppercut and West was down for the count of nine, and after he staggered to his feet the colored fighter sent in the same kind of a blow and West dropped to the mat again, this time for a count of seven when the gong sounded. At the outset of the fourth round West was a bit groggy from the severe beating he had been receiving in the round previous. For a moment the two boxed, and then Dixie Kid sent over his terrific left again and caught West flush on the jaw. The blow sent him through the ropes, and he was unconscious for five minutes.

In the semi-final there was another knockout when Jack Farrel bested Kid Williams. But three rounds Williams roughed things, but in the fourth Farrel came back strong and felled his opponent with a straight left. Williams was barely able to rise at the count of nine, and when he did manage to find his footing Farrel sent him down again with hard body punches.

Attell and Murphy Both Fit for Bout.

If all is true that Abe Attell and Tommy Murphy have said about their condition the last time they fought, the bout at the Empire Athletic Club several weeks ago was nothing like what it should have been, and it looked pretty good at that. Attell says that he had a bad thumb then, thereby handicapping him considerably, and Murphy said that on the night in question he was feeling like anything but a well man. There is nothing of this nature attached to the go to-night which the National Sporting Club has offered as the main attraction for its weekly show. Murphy has been in training at Fishkill, and he says he is in fine condition. He wants to win to-night for more than one reason, as he is bent on forcing Wolgast into a match for the lightweight championship. Attell's known cleverness leaves nothing new to tell about what he can do, though the difference in weight between him and Murphy only adds interest to to-night's affair. Attell will not box here after to-night until after his fight with Driscoll for the featherweight championship.

BALDWIN BEAT SMITH.

Boston Lightweight Too Strong for the California Boxer.

Except in the fourth and tenth rounds there was not much of a very exciting nature in the bout between Matty Baldwin of Boston and Frankie Smith at the Madison Athletic Club last night.

Baldwin was master of the situation when the tenth round was over, but he did not show any of the fierceness and dogged energy he displayed in the unfortunate affair at the National Sporting Club last week. The crowd last night to show where it stood on that matter cheered him heartily when he entered the ring.

Smith showed some fair streaks of scientific boxing during the bout, and his ability in this respect kept him in the game in the fourth round when Baldwin's rugged work all but finished him.

Up to this round it was a fairly even affair. Both early showed their hands. Baldwin was the rough, careless, sturdy fighter, while Smith was steady, careful, and inclined to spar for points. Baldwin went along with him, too, on these lines, and when he saw he was not forging ahead any took to his own style again, which showed his good judgment. He could always beat Smith at the punching game.

Smith started the fast work in the fourth. He was a bit rough, too. They started to exchange hard ones without much idea of defense, and invariably they rushed to the clinch. In one of these Baldwin slipped to the floor. Smith showed some good aiming at this stage, and landed his left squarely more than once on Baldwin's mouth and chin. Baldwin kept circling around, looking for a good chance. About thirty seconds before the round closed he got it. Zip! His right arm swung diagonally downward with all the speed he had, and landed squarely on the jaw. Down went Smith. He arose very uncertainly and stalled mighty cleverly, but Baldwin managed to swing over another right before the welcome sound of the bell came to Smith's ears. He went to his corner very wabbly.

The succeeding rounds showed little of moment until the tenth arrived. Then Baldwin sailed in again and showed what he could do if he really tried. He banged Smith around pretty much as he pleased, and no one was happier that the thing was over than the boy from California.

Johnny Lewis put it all over Joe Hurley in the six-round semi-final.

SHOW HORSES IN SALES RING.

Sultan and Sandow Are Sold at Durland's for $1,000.

Sultan and Sandow, winners of over 100 ribbons at horse shows throughout America and at the London international show, were sold at auction last night at the special combination sale at Durland's Riding Academy, Sixty-sixth Street and Central Park West. The pair of high steppers went to J. Devlin for $1,000, a ridiculously low figure for heavy harness champions. Albert De Gernea, the auctioneer, made every effort to secure an advance, but was compelled to let them go to the highest bidder.

The pick of Col. Charles T. Railey's lot of saddle horses was Zulal, a bay mare, which was knocked down to C. O. Knapp for $1,000. Ute, a big gelding, was sold to Dr. Grensids for $375. The Spider and Fly, prize winners at many shows, went into Mrs. Howard's stable for $1,000 after some brisk bidding.

No N. Y. Y. C. Cruise Announcement.

The expected announcement of the cruise of the New York Yacht Club was not forthcoming last night. The third general meeting of the club was held at the clubhouse, West Forty-fourth Street, but only routine business was transacted. It was generally expected that the cruise would be announced, but the subject was not discussed. Commodore James will announce the details of the annual event in a few days. At last night's meeting, twenty yacht owners were present and seventeen new members were elected.

Harry Cline Wins Two Games.

Harry Cline played two practice games of 18.2 balkline billiards yesterday at Maurice Daly's Billiard Academy, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, and won both of them. In the afternoon he defeated Arthur Cutler by the score of 400 to 241. Cline's high runs for this game were 106 and 94, and his average 26 10-15. Cutler's high runs were 110 and 32, and his average was 17 3-14. In the evening game Cline defeated Maurice Daly by the score of 400 to 210. Cline's high run was 90 and his average was 22 4-8. Daly's high run was 42 and his average was 12 11-17.

Piet Outpoints Burns.

The star bout last night at the Long Acre A. A. between Henri Piet of France and Kid Burns was of a disappointing one. It went the scheduled ten rounds, and at the final bell the Frenchman had a slight shade on his opponent. Piet was in better shape and willing to fight, while Burns showed signs of weakening. In the first round the only work was done by Piet, who landed a few good blows to the body. The opening of the second brought both men in the centre of the ring in a clinch, when Burns landed several hard blows on the kidneys and stomach. Piet was cautioned for what appeared to be fouling in the third. Burns did his best work in the sixth, when he landed his right and left on the face, and Piet missed a wild swing for the stomach, causing him to go through the ropes. Both men fought hard in the ninth and exchanged freely, but the Frenchman was the strongest and had the better of the exchange. The last round found both men fighting each other around the ring, but no real harm was done. Young Yank and Kid O'Connor put up a good go in the semi-final.

CLARO MAKES FAST TIME ON SPEEDWAY

Gibbons's Pacer Covers Half Mile in 1:01¼ at Opening Matinee of Road Drivers.

The Spring series of cup races under the auspices of the Road Drivers' Association was inaugurated yesterday on the Speedway, when close finishes and fast time marked the events on the card. Claro, the Speedway pacing champion, owned and driven by Joseph F. Gibbons, covered the half mile in 1:01¼ in an effort to beat the time of the fastest pacing class. The time was five seconds better than the afternoon's best figures.

William Scott's newcomer, Louise E., won both heats of the Class C pace in 1:08, finishing fifteen lengths to the good in each heat. This is unusually fast time for early season matinees. One of the best events was the four-heat race with Triphammer, Jap, and Lemon Girl as the contenders. Each horse won a heat by a close margin. The final heat went to Triphammer, although the majority of the spectators thought Jap had won by a head.

In the fast pacing class Sol B. Wolf's Minnie Albert had everything her own way, with Hallock, Dr. Threet, and Kate Nelson as the contenders. The latter was withdrawn in the second heat. E. Shoemaker's new trotter, Dick, won the Class F trot in straight heats, covering the second in 1:09. The summaries:

MRS. FAITH WINS AT GOLF.

Captures Handicap Net Score Honors —Mrs. Polhemus's Gross Card Best.

Honors were divided in the one-day tournament, open to members of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association, held over the links of the Richmond County Country Club on Staten Island yesterday. The eighteen-hole medal play handicap was won by Mrs. W. J. Faith of Wykagyl, with a card of 98—7—91, while Mrs. T. H. Polhemus of the home club carried off the gross score prize with a capital of 94. Mrs. H. W. Ely of Scarsdale won the clock golf putting contest with a score of 23.

It was the first affair of its kind this season in the metropolitan district, and the women made a fine showing, for the long Richmond County circuit is anything but easy, covering as it does a playing length of considerably more than 6,000 yards. Under the circumstances the 92 returned by Mrs. Polhemus was highly creditable, and shows that the Richmond County woman has reached the form she displayed in the Fall of 1908, when she was runner-up to Miss Kate Harley in the National championship tournament at Chevy Chase. The best Miss Julia R. Mix, the metropolitan title holder, could do was a 98, a stroke higher than Mrs. Swift, formerly Miss Elizabeth Hurry. The scores:

CAN USE MALLET PUTTER.

U. S. Golf Association Not Likely to Follow British Action.

Robert C. Watson, Secretary of the United States Golf Association, yesterday received official confirmation of the fact that the Schenectady putter, one of the most popular golf clubs used in this country, had been ruled out by the St. Andrew's Golf Club of Scotland. Mr. Watson cabled yesterday regarding the matter and received a reply saying that the ban had been placed on the club. He said that the matter would come before the United States Golf Association, the controlling body in golf on this side of the water, in the near future, but added that there was little likelihood that action of the same nature would be taken against the mallet putter in this country.

The question of the status of the club since the report of its being barred on the other side has aroused much comment from the golfers throughout the country, notably some of the best players. While there has been some sympathy with the action by the St. Andrew's organization, the majority have appeared content to let the mallet putter be an eligible club.

One of the most prominent of those who hold to the Schenectady putter is Walter Travis, who once said that it was due in a large measure to this club that he was enabled to win the National amateur championship several years ago.

Why Not Buy a Motor Car the Same Way You'd Buy a Home?

More motor cars are sold from outward appearances—because of the glimmer of the paint and the brilliancy of the brass—than from actual observation of working parts.

You wouldn't buy a home that way, would you?

You wouldn't walk up to the front gate—look at the paint and varnish, the shape of the roof and gables—and say "I'll take it." Well, hardly! Then why buy a Motor car that way?

The real interest for you is the "inside."

You want to see the size of the rooms, the finish of them, the conveniences of the grouping—the final assembly of the home as a whole.

And that's exactly what you should do—when buying a car.

Get to the inside of it first of all.

Observe first of all the SIZE OF THE MOTOR—make sure it's big enough and strong enough; note the assembly—the finished appearance of the power plant; observe how it's grouped—to make it easy work in caring for it; then note particularly the aluminum mud-proof and dust-proof base—that keeps dirt away from your motor—just as properly built windows will keep dust and dirt out of your home.

These are details, we know—but to the man who buys a car for the pleasure of himself and his family—they are mighty important.

Don't be misled by the fellow who tells you his factory is building five thousand cars a year or more. Maybe he'd be better off to build but fifty—and have them MECHANICALLY RIGHT.

We stop building cars—when we reach the point where the workmanship on a single one has to be slighted the least bit. We prefer a record of PERFORMANCE—rather than one of PRODUCTION.

Now, honestly, don't you feel a good deal the same way about it?

LONG RACE FOR GRAND PRIZE.

Distance Increased to 379.2 Miles Over the Motor Parkway.

The course for the grand prize race of the Automobile Club of America, which will be over the Motor Parkway, Long Island, Oct. 15, has been increased to 379.2 miles, or thirty laps. At a meeting yesterday of the Motor Cups Holding Company, which will have charge of the race, it was decided to increase the length of the race nearly one-third more than the original distance, which was 278.8 miles, or twenty-two laps.

The committee, by virtue of the published conditions of the race, has reserved the right to make such changes in the rules as in its judgment is deemed necessary. The addition of 101.6 miles to the length of the course will add more than two hours to the time required to run the race.

†Batted for Sweeney in the ninth inning.

Two-base hits—Roach, Wolter. Home runs—Lajoie, Chase. Stolen bases—Turner, Gardner. Left on bases—Cleveland, 4; New York, 8. First base on errors—Cleveland, 1; New York, 2. Struck out—By Joss, 4; by Quinn, 4. Bases on balls—Off Joss, 1; off Quinn, 1. Time of game—One hour and fifty-one minutes. Umpires—Messrs. Evans and Egan.

Displaying a fine bit of bunting skill in the tenth inning on the Hilltop yesterday, the Yankees out generaled and beat Cleveland in a game which teemed with spine-tickling excitement, by the score of 4 to 3. Three cleverly dumped bunts on the carpet in front of the scoring tray by Hemphill, Wolter, and Chase, followed by a cracking single to Laporte cooked Cleveland's goose. It was not a new trick for the Yanks, for they have won games before by grouping bunts at the eleventh hour, but they never did it with more baseball intelligence than yesterday. It was resourceful strategy, popped when the time was ripe, and when any other baseball tactics might have failed.

It was another one of those matinees where the Yankees grew stronger as the sun sank down over the Palisades. Starting off quietly, New York showed little aggressiveness at the bat, and it looked as if literary Addie Joss was going to put a crimp in the Yankees' string of victories. In the sixth with the score 3 to 0 against them, Chase's men grouped three exceedingly fortunate hits, and engraved two runs on the tablet. And then something happened which trembled the whole upper end of the island.

The Reception Committee will now please group itself with dignity and slip the hero's wreath to Capt. Hal Chase. In the eighth, when the way to victory seemed hazy, Chase, with three bats swinging over his shoulder, walked to the plate. He carelessly tossed two bats away, and kept a short, stubby one. Determination gleamed in Joss's eye. Chase rubbed his hands with dirt. His spikes dug into the soil. You could feel that something was going to be pulled off. The haughty Joss, the tall, silver-like pitching machine, wound himself into a knot, and as he straightened out from his figure-eight pose, that ball shot toward the plate like a rifle ball. Chase met it with a mighty crash, and it soared high and far to rig field.

See it go, on and on, over the heads of the outfielders. Elmer, Flick, and Graney raced after it, but it flew like a bird straight for the fence. Look at Chase move; that's the kind of sack galloping that gets you something. As he rounded second, the ball has just bounded against the fence, and he took a peek at it over his left shoulder. He raced on past "dead man's curve" at third, and was home before the ball was back to second. The score was tied.

After all what do the petty worries of life, the daily grind for a living wage, the ills and ailments of one's existence amount to when you can see Chase butcher the ball that way and tie the score? All else in life seems trivial, doesn't it, compared with the resounding rocket which screams the death knell of the enemy? But smother that racket, and give the breeze a chance, for the game isn't won yet.

The daily lesson will now be taken up, pupils, back in the third inning with the Naps at the bat. Jack Quinn is pitching good ball, understand, but his support isn't as much like a brick wall as it might be. Lord poled to Wolter, who muffed. Perring sacrificed him along and Joss grounded to Chase.

Turner pounded a grounder to deep short and beat out Roach's throw to first, Lord scoring. Turner stole second and scored on Graney's single to centre. In the fifth, up comes Larry Lajoie. Poor Larry was only a wreck of his former self. What? He gazed at the ball listlessly just as if he didn't care how he hit it. Well, he didn't care, either, and he smashed it with such brutal joy that it shot over Wolter's head and Larry schottished home.

Yes, of course it looks all day with New York, but never you mind worrying about the Yankees, just keep your eye on the game. Wolter opened the sixth with a pop back of second. Three players rushed for it and it spilled in the crowd with Wolter safe at second. Chase was safe on another almost-no-e-hit past Lajois. Laporte fanned. Then Roach slammed out a two-bagger—the first clean swipe that was made off Joss—and Wolter and Chase scored. Chase's fleetness made the second run possible.

Then, in the eighth, came Chase's crushing home run which was the beginning of the end. Quinn tightened up and held the Clevelands at bay after the fourth and never faltered.

Now, concerning this fine bundle of condensed batting that the Yankees showed in the tenth, let it be known that Hemphill started the proceedings. He chopped off a bunt which landed near the third base line and spun in the grass like a top. Wolter bunted another short one to Perring, who was slow in getting it over, and Wolter, who can cover ground like an antelope, beat it out. Chase laid a third bunt in the direction of first base and beat it out, filling the bases. The Yankee who was coaching at first must have had insomnia, for he failed to see Stovall work an old trick which Noah first sprung in the Ark League. Stovall hid the ball in his glove and tagged Chase when he took a step off the pillow.

When it comes to pushing in much-reeded runs, Laporte is certainly the first delivery wagon that stops at the door in the early morning. He banged a red-hot liner over Lajoie's awning and Larry climbed right in the clouds and stopped it with his leathered fin. He picked the ball up and tried to catch Hemphill going in from third, but Hemphill dug his way right down under the grass and came serenely up out of the earth safe at home with the winning run.

If the other clashes of this series are going to be anything like yesterday's game you'd better see old Dr. Heartbeat and get your right auricle put into shape for the shock.

BOSTON, Mass., May 19.—Boston won a slow game from Chicago to-day 8 to 0. Ciootte kept the visitors' hits well scattered, while in the second inning the locals bunched four hits with an error and scored all their runs. Parent's throwing hand was slightly injured by a line drive. Chicago's manager, Hugh Duffy, an old Boston and Providence player, got a hearty welcome and was presented with a floral piece by a delegation of Providence friends. The score:

BASEBALL NOTES.

Because St. Louis refused to waive claim on Catcher Beckendorf the latter will be retained by the Detroit American League club. It had been planned to let him go to Montreal on terms under which he could be recalled to Detroit when needed.

It was announced yesterday that the New Britain team of the Connecticut League had been sold by Daniel O'Neil, former owner of the Springfield team of the same league. The terms of the sale were not made known.

Pitcher Higgins, who was recently released to the Denver Western League club by the St. Louis Nationals, has been returned to the latter club because of a hitch in the conditions of release.

Charles Comiskey, President of the Chicago American League club, has purchased Charles French, a utility infielder, from the Boston Americans.

President Ban Johnson of the American League saw yesterday's game, sitting in the grand stand with Manager Ed Barrows of the Montreal team of the Eastern League. Mr. Barrows is here looking for an infielder and isn't particular which team gives it to him.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 19.—The game which the Reds took from the Giants here this afternoon by an 8 to 7 score was one of the weakest imaginable from the pitching standpoint. Both sides showed up so badly with their twirlers that the batsmen on both teams took peculiar delight in sending many balls far afield and romping about the bases. McGraw began with Ames, who allowed two runs in two innings, and was supplanted by "Rube" Marquard, who allowed three men to walk to first, and remained on the mound but one and one-third innings. Then Crandall took up the burden, and lasted just a wee bit longer than Marquard. And the whole affair wound up with Dickson in the box, and working by far the best of any pitcher used by the visitors. For Cincinnati, Roy Castleton was employed until he took to the winds in the third. Jack Rowan followed, and remained until it was all over.

Bobby Bescher began the first inning for Cincinnati by beating out a bunt. He stole second, was held at third on Hoblitzel's single, but came home on Mitchell's grounder. In the second McLean singled to centre, Lobert walked, Castleton grounded out, and then Bescher doubled to left, scoring McLean and Lobert.

At the start of the third Schlei singled over second, Snodgrass batted for Ames and singled. Devore singled, filling the bases. Doyle singled to left, and Schlei scored. Castleton was taken out and Rowan substituted. Murray's single to centre scored Snodgrass, and Devore scored when Seymour sent a sacrifice fly to Paskert.

In the fourth there was much fun for Cincinnati. McLean singled to left, but was caught off first, Marquard to Merkle to Bridwell. Lobert took his second walk of the day, and was followed a moment later by Pitcher Rowan. Lobert and the pitcher worked a double steal, and a moment later Bescher also walked. McGraw sent Crandall out in Marquard's place. Paskert walked and Lobert scored. Hoblitzel doubled to right, and Rowan and Bescher tallied. Mitchell singled to the right garden, and went on to second on the throw-in, both Paskert and Hoblitzel touching the plate. That was all for Cincinnati, but it was enough.

In the sixth Seymour singled to right, and Bridwell's grounder was too hot for Downey. Devlin singled to right, and the bases were full. Merkle sacrificed to Paskert, who made a pretty catch, but Seymour tallied. Keeler batted for Schlei and filed out to Bescher. Myers, batting for Crandall, hit to Lobert, who, with Egan, ran down Devlin, but Bridwell scored before they could get the ball home.

Merkle began the ninth by singling to left. Wilson filed out, but Becker, who went in as a pinch hitter, reached first on an error by Downey. Devore then singled and Merkle scored. Doyle forced Devore. Murray singled and Becker came home. Seymour tried to put one past Mitchell, but the middlefielder got it, and he was out.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong in Dull Market—Call Money Rates, 2@3¾ Per Cent.

TRADING STILL DIMINISHES

Volume Below Wednesday's Level—Exchange Strong and Demand Money Weak—English Bank Report.

To properly chronicle affairs on the Stock Exchange nowadays it is necessary to resort to laboriously compiled volumes of synonyms for variations for the very much overworked phrase "intense dullness." Early in the week the market passed out of the stage which might be described as inactive into that of torpor, and on Wednesday, when the volume of business fell away to proportions smaller than anything attained in nearly two years, it seemed fitting to brand the market as stagnant and to turn hopefully to Thursday for better things. Such hopes were completely disappointed, however, for transactions yesterday managed to fall substantially under those of Wednesday, the third hour of the session creating what must be very nearly a record in the sales of only 17,000 shares or thereabouts. Some relief was afforded, however, by the unexpected strength of prices. Stocks rose very sharply in the morning's session, and the later reaction no more than sufficed to reduce the earlier gains of a point or more to advances of substantial fractions over the quotations of the previous night. Outside of the universally favorable reports from wheat and cotton fields, there was nothing in the day's news to explain the strength of securities. It is perhaps not too wide of the mark to assume that the narrowness of the price movement and the contraction of trading have led to short covering on the part of speculators who dislike to hold a bearish position under such circumstances. Because the afternoon recessions coincided in point of time with the announcement of the postponement of the Chesapeake & Ohio dividend meeting and news from Washington that Senator Borah had introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the country's steel plants the disposition among traders on the floor of the Exchange was to attribute the declines to these developments. On the Cotton Exchange Wednesday's liquidating sales were repeated and quotations again forced to lower levels. Grain markets were once more heavy, and movements in both cotton and wheat were in all respects in keeping with the highly satisfactory news from the crop country.

Call money rates fell to 2 per cent. for the first time in many weeks, responding rather belatedly to the recent accumulation of cash by the local banks and absence of demand for funds for stock market purposes. The foreign exchange market reversed its proceedings of Wednesday, demand sterling rising 23 points before the day's close. The usual weekly report of the Bank of England reflected the liberal policy of that institution, now that it has strengthened its position to its liking. Its holdings of gold decrease $2,377,000, but its reserve percentage, in spite of a decline of a point from that of last week, is still much above anything recorded at this season since 1896.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Exchange Turns Goldward.

An advance of a quarter of a cent to the pound in the price of sterling exchange yesterday led to the suggestion in banking circles of the possibility of a resumption of the gold export movement should the upward tendency shown yesterday prove anything more than the result of temporary influence. The easier tone of the money market here and firmer discount rates abroad contributed to the advance in exchange, but short covering was also credited with exerting important influence on the movement of exchange, and this latter factor most likely will exert only temporary effect. Yesterday's movement, however, made it clear that the position of the exchange market was such as favored a sharp rise, such as was experienced yesterday. Demand sterling rose from 4.8710 to 4.8730, while sterling cables toward the close of the day sold up to 4.8780. Offsetting the possibility of further gold exports on the ordinary operations in the exchange market is the fact that a reserve of exchange is being created through the placing of American securities on the other side of the Atlantic, and it is naturally to be expected that the exchange thus created yould be avalied of to check a rise which threatened to bring about a resumption of the gold outflow.

***

The St. Paul Issue.

The Executive Committee of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul held a meeting yesterday, at which consideration was given to some details of the sale of $50,000,000 bonds which has been arranged in Paris. A member of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., which is placing these bonds in Paris, attended yesterday's meeting. The matter is one which involves much detail, but it is said to be progressing in a way entirely satisfactory to the road's bankers.

***

Want Better Cotton Bills.

The attention recently drawn to the ease with which bogus cotton bills of lading were disposed of in the market has caused discussion among bankers of the advisability of attempting some plan which would make more difficult the placing of bogus bills of lading for cotton. It was reported yesterday that steps would be taken by New York bankers to put a barrier in the way of such bogus bills as a measure of protection against fraud. New York bankers, in periods of large cotton exports, buy a great many of these cotton drafts accompanied by bills of lading, which serve as security for the drifts, and it is a matter of natural concern to these bankers, as well as to the community generally, that as many safeguards as possible be thrown about the issuance of these bills of lading. The cotton bills purchased by bankers every year run into several mundred millions of dollars.

***

Dullest Day This Year.

Yesterday's market was the dullest of the year, the total being 218,198 shares. Brokers see little immediate prospect of a return to active markets, and even the buoyant business getter has difficulty in being persuasive.

***

Short Session To-day.

With the London market closed and the session here beginning at noon in memory of King Edward, there is little prospect of better business to-day on the eve of the Saturday short session. The Board of Trade in Chicago and the Chicago Stock Exchange will not open until 11 o'clock, and the Produce Exchange, the Maritime Exchange, and all of the leading Exchanges of the country will likewise open late. The New York Cotton Exchange, however, on account of a May notice day falling to-day, will hold a full session. The Consolidated Stock Exchange and the Curb market will, of course, follow the Stock Exchange's lead in remaining closed until noon.

***

Paris Listing Once More.

In the midst of yesterday's stagnation private cables from Paris were heard of reviving last year's stories of a prospective listing on the Bourse of a block of United States Steel shares. No definite basis could be established for the story, which put the amount to be admitted to trading in Paris at 200,000 shares, saying that the arrangements, of which the market heard so much during last year's rise, were now about perfected.

INSIDERS BUY BACK U. S. TRUST CO. STOCK

Last of the Blocks Mutual Life Once Held for Control Transferred to Them.

THE END OF A MERGER PLAN

George W. Young and Leroy W. Baldwin, the Sellers, Acquired the Stock in 1906 to Effect Consolidations.

The United States Mortgage and Trust Company stock, which was acquired from the Mutual Life Insurance Company in 1906 by George W. Young and Leroy W. Baldwin and their associates, has been sold to persons identified with interests which now control the United States Mortgage and Trust Company, with which Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and their associates recently became identified. This transaction clears up the last of the stock through which the Mutual Life formerly held control and at the same time gives the ownership of all the important blocks of this stock to the interests dominant in the United States Mortgage and Trust Company. In fact, it gives these interests an actual majority of the capital stock of $2,000,000.

The Young-Baldwin block amounted to about 1,200 shares, and at current quotations is worth about $570,000. This stock was acquired from the Mutual Life in the course of an unsuccessful effort to bring about the merger of the United States Mortgage and Trust Company, the Windsor Trust Company, and the Empire Trust Company. Mr. Baldwin is President of the Empire Trust Company, and Mr. Young has been prominently identified with the Windsor Trust since its organization. The group formed by Mr. Young and Mr. Baldwin proposed buying all the United States Mortgage stock, amounting to about 10,000 shares, formerly held by the Mutual Life. A first payment of about $500,000 was made, and then the troublous times of 1907 prevented the consummation of the plan.

Later the Mutual Life sold about half of its United States Mortgage and Trust holdings to a syndicate headed by the late C. C. Cuyler, who was elected President of that trust company shortly before his death. Several months ago, Kuhn, Loeb & Co. purchased the rest of the Mutual Life's holdings, and this stock, as well as the stock previously purchased by Mr. Cuyler, was distributed among the Directors of the institution and others directly interested in its welfare. Those same interests have now acquired these 1,200 shares which originally formed the nucleus of the plan for the merger of three trust companies into one institution.

The Pennsylvania Renews a Lease.

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, May 19.—At a stockholders' meeting held here to-day the Pennsylvania Railroad renewed for 999 years the lease of the Pittsburg, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad, to take effect on July 1, when the old lease expires. A dividend was declared and a 7 per cent. dividend was guaranteed for the lease of the road.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 19.—Another very dull day was witnessed in the local copper share market, but the undertone was strong, and what changes there were were in favor of higher prices. Isle Royale, which has been in fair demand the past few days, advanced 2 points, and Indiana gained a point. The balance of the copper shares are fractionally higher. In the miscellaneous list United Fruit was the feature, making a further advance to 196.

COTTON.

The cotton market was active and excited. During the first hour there was a general advance, particularly in the old crop deliveries, and support was given in a very pronounced way. The Liverpool market was strong, and there were reports of much better trade demand in Manchester and on the Continent. Toward midday all support was withdrawn and the market broke nearly ½c a pound with very heavy selling at times. The greatest decline was in the Summer months, but the new crop deliveries were also weak. The break below the final of the previous day caught a good many stop orders, and there seemed to be little or no support to the market. There was a good deal of long cotton thrown over, and the buying by the bull interest seemed to be very limited. The local receipts continue large, and there was a further increase in the certificated stock. The receipts are expected to be heavy the balance of this month and there are predictions to the effect that the movement will be liberal during June and July. The break in the market, however, has been so sharp that offers of cotton from the South may be restricted by the decline. The weather conditions were favorable. There were some rains in the cotton States and temperatures were of a fairly seasonable average. The general showers reported in the cotton States and the higher temperatures are considered very favorable conditions to bring forward the crop. Late there was a sharp recovery, and the net change for the day was slight.

Southern spot markets unchanged to ⅛c decline.

New York spot cotton quiet, 30 decline; middling uplands, 14.20; middling Gulf, 15.45.

Coffee was again quiet, total sales amounting to 9,000 bags, but prices were about steady, closing at unchanged to five points net decline. Havre was ¼ franc lower, Hamburg was unchanged, and in Brazil both Rio and Santos were unchanged, with receipts of 11,000 bags, against 10,000 bags last week and 9,000 bags last year. The visible supply of Brazilian coffee in and afloat for the United States is 3,061,496 bags, compared with 3,611,629 bags last year and 3,611,496 bags two years ago. GATES OIL DOUBLING CAPITAL.

His Texas Rival to Standard Oil to Increase Stock to $36,000,000.

The Texas company, which is John W. Gates's rival of the Standard Oil in the Southwest, has called a special meeting of stockholders for May 28, at Houston, Texas, to vote on a proposed increase in capital from $18,000,000 to $36,000,000, and at the same time to empower the Directors to pay out part of the new shares as a stock dividend.

Only last October the company's capital was increased from $12,000,000 to $18,000,000, the increase at that time having been made for the purpose of providing for the conversion of the company's 6 per cent. gold debentures, which are convertible at the option of the holder into stock at $150 a share. In order to allow these debenture holders to participate in the proposed stock dividend, they will have until June 15 to exchange their holdings for stock at the rate of 6 2-3 shares for each bond.

The Texas Company started in 1903 with a capital of $3,000,000. The balance sheet at the close of the last fiscal year, Aug. 1, 1909, showed a surplus of $5,200,000, as compared with $4,000,000 on June 30, 1908.

TO ISSUE $25,000,000 BONDS.

Central New England Seeks Permission from Public Service Board.

ALBANY, May 19.—The Central New England Railway Company has applied to the Public Service Commission for permission to mortgage its property and franchises to secure an issue of mortgage bonds amounting to $25,000,000, and for an order authorizing the immediate issue of $12,419,000 with which to take up outstanding obligations.

The previous application of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company for re-financing the Central New England Railway property was denied by the commission on Aug 11, 1909, on the ground that the plan proffered did not sufficiently safeguard the interests of minority holders.

THE COMMODITIES MARKETS.

Wheat Dull and Steady—Coarse Grain Easier—Provisions Dull and Lower—Cotton Active and Lower.

There was a dull and rather featureless trade in wheat most of the session. The market was a little lower early, and there was some evidence of heavy selling West, but later the volume of business was light and prices slowly worked upward, with considerable covering by early sellers. The foreign markets were also following the decline in America. There were reports of more favorable crop conditions in Russia. The American weather was better, with further rains in the American and Canadian Northwest. It was still cool, however, in the Northwest territory. There were complaints of insect damage in the Central West, and when shorts tried to cover offerings were light and prices quickly worked upward. Reports regarding the crop situation continue of a conflicting character from the Southwest, and there are reports of considerable damage by insects in Illinois. Otherwise the conditions are reported as favorable, and the rains have materially improved the crop.

Cash wheat quoted: No. 2 red, Winter, $1.15, nominal; No. 2 red, spot, nominal, free on board, afloat, for export, $1.15¾; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.18¾, nominal; No. 2 hard Winter nominal, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.04½.

The corn market weakened, with quiet trade. There was further liquidation, and there was more or less selling on reports of increasing country offerings and of good weather for field work. The cash market continues slow, and new buying is of moderate proportions, but stocks at points of accumulation continue to decrease rapidly. Cash corn quoted: No. 2, 68¼c, nominal, elevator, domestic basis, and steamer, nominal, elevator, export basis.

Oats were dull and weaker. There was further selling on the weather conditions. There were rains in the American Northwest, and temperatures in other sections were more seasonable. The movement is of fair proportions, but demand for cash oats has been reducing supplies steadily for some time, and there seems to be very little pressure of cash oats on the market. Cash oats quoted: Natural white, 46@48c; white, clipped, 46¼@52c.

The trade in provisions was light at somewhat lower prices. The market was affected by larger movements of hogs, weakening in live hog prices, and somewhat larger packing returns for the past week.

CHINESE RAILWAYS BUY HERE.

New York House Gets Large Order Equipment and Shop Supplies.

A goodly part of the equipment orders for railways in China has come to the New York house of Manning, Maxwell & Moore, according to dispatches received in Wall Street from Pekin yesterday. The orders, which include shop and pile driving equipment and a small number of locomotives, amount to about $750,000. The locomotives include three Lima locomotives, four Baldwin compounds, and two Baldwin suburbans. The shop equipment is for the Nankow shops of the Pekin-Kalgan Railway, and for the shops on the Chang-Sui extension of the same line at Kalgan. An additional order amounting to $200,000 covers machinery for the Government Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Pekin.

A rail order calling for 8,000 tons of American rails is said to have been placed through German agents for the Lo-Tung Railway, which is also buying four Baldwin locomotives and other equipment.

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

Happenings of a Day in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, May 19.—Money was dearer to-day, with the supply restricted, owing to the income tax collection. Discount rates were firmer, in sympathy with the advance in money.

Business on the Stock Exchange was restricted, owing to the holiday to-morrow and the week-end. Consols and home rails maintained their firmness, and Grand Trunks and Mexican rails hardened a fraction, but the other sections were neglected. Diamond shares closed weak.

American securities opened a fraction higher, and improved on bear covering. At noon the market was firm, with prices from ⅛ to 1 point higher. In the afternoon, however, prices eased, under light offerings, until Wall Street opened, when good buying orders caused a recovery, with Canadian Pacific, which crossed the 200 mark, the feature.

The whole market closed steady at a fraction below the best.

Bar silver steady at 24 18-16d per ounce.

Money, 3@3½ per cent.; rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 3⅝@¾ per cent.; for three months' bills, 3 9-16@3⅝ per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted at Madrid 6.95 and at Lisbon 10.50.

PARIS, May 19.—Prices on the Bourse were steady to-day.

Three per cent. rentes, 98f 85c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 27c for checks.

BERLIN, May 19.—The tone of the Boerse was quiet to-day, with prices irregular. Canadian Pacific showed the most activity.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 50 pfenigs for checks.

Money, 3½ per cent.

Private rate of discount, 3¼ per cent.

CORPORATIONS SLOW IN PAYING NEW TAX

Biggest Ones Holding Off for United States Supreme Court Decision.

PAYMENTS UNDER PROTEST

Collector Believes Protests Unnecessary, as Money, He Says, Will Be Returned if Act Is Illegal.

Few, if any, of the large corporations have as yet paid their tax assessment under the new Federal tax law. They are waiting until the last few days of June, near the expiration of the time limit, not only to have the use of the money as long as possible but in the hope that a decision from the United States Supreme Court may relieve them from paying the tax at all.

Many of the corporation lawyers say that it is unlikely that the Supreme Court will hand down its decision before the Summer vacations begin, which is around the first of June. Should such be the case the corporations subject to the tax will not know whether the law is to stand until late in the Fall.

Already many of the smaller corporations have sent their checks to Collector of Internal Revenue Anderson of the Second District, accompanied by a formal protest against the payment of the tax. The large corporations have also been instructed by their lawyers to pay the tax assessment under protest. By paying under protest the corporations will protect their legal rights, so the lawyers say.

Federal officials, however, say that the payment under formal protest is unnecessary, because in the event of the corporation tax being declared unconstitutional the Government would refund all money paid under the law, regardless of protests or the absence of protest.

Among the corporations which are waiting until the last few days of the time allowed by law to pay assessments are the United States Steel Corporation, the American Tobacco Company, the American Sugar Refining Company, the Standard Oil Company, and, in fact, about all of the so-called trusts which have their executive offices in this city.

The largest certified check received by the Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District was for $1,000.

All assessments on corporations under the new Federal tax law are made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington and forwarded to the various collectors for distribution among the corporations in his district. No payments are made direct to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In fact, if the checks are sent to Washington they will be returned by the Department of Internal Revenue to the Collector in whose district the corporation making the mistake is located. Several checks sent to the office of Commissioner Cabell in Washington have been returned to Collector Anderson here.

Upon receiving certified checks and cash from the corporations in the Second District Collector Anderson deposits the funds in the Sub-Treasury.

The question of whether a corporation shall pay the Federal tax in cash or otherwise has been left by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the discretion of the Collectors. Collector Anderson was one of the first to announce that he would accept certified checks instead of cash. Some of the Collectors, however, are demanding payment of the tax in cash.

New Directors in Rubber Companies.

The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company and the General Rubber Company, subsidiaries of the United States Rubber Company, held their annual meetings yesterday and elected new Directors, the latter concern increasing its board from ten to thirteen, of which the new Directors are E. C. Benedict, Ernest Hopkinson, and H. Stuart Hotchkiss. Edgar B. Davis was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of J. J. Watson, Jr. In the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company board Mr. Watson was succeeded by J. B. Ford. The other Directors were re-elected.

Stock Exchange Seat $78,000.

Two transfers of Stock Exchange seats were posted yesterday, the sale of C. N. Fairchild's seat to William P. Simpson being reported at $78,000. The same price was paid in April. The highest price this year was $94,000. Robert B. Van Cortlandt & Kean, Van Cortlandt & Co., has transferred his seat to Hamilton F. Kean of that firm. Mr. Van Cortlandt is about to start on an extended tour abroad.

Chesapeake Directors Had No Quorum.

The meeting of the Directors of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company yesterday, at which action on the expected dividend increase from 4 to 5 per cent. was looked for, was adjourned until to-day at noon on account of no quorum.

NEW SCHOLASTIC RECORDS.

Eight Marks Bettered at Commercial's Invitation Track Meet.

The annual invitation track and field meet of Commercial High School, held yesterday afternoon at Commercial Field, Brooklyn, in which Commercial, Erasmus Hall, Manual Training, and Boys' High Schools participated, showed record-breaking performances. Eight new marks were established and one record was equaled. New figures were made in the 100-yard dash, (junior;) the one-mile run, 220-yard dash, (junior;) 220-yard dash, (senior;) running high jump, twelve-pound shot put, pole vault, running broad jump, and discus throw. The record equaled was the 100-yard dash, (senior.)

The point trophy went to the Manual Training athletes, who scored a total of 59. Commercial was second with 51, Boys' High third with 34, and Erasmus brought up the rear with 8 points.

One of the remarkable performances of the meet came in the 100-yard dash, (junior,) when E. Trefry, a small runner of Commercial, covered the distance in 10 1-5 seconds. He ran in remarkable form, but was helped to the mark which he established by a brisk breeze, which blew down the stretch.

Vessie, another Commercial athlete, ran a pretty race in the one-mile event, winning by about ten yards. He went to the front with the crack of the gun, closely pressed by Herd, one of his teammates. These two made the running all the way, Herd closely following his rival until the turn into the stretch for the final sprint. Vessie then drew away and crossed the line with ten yards advantage. The summary:

Vegetable Fibre Braid and Silk Braid Given Lower Rate of Duty.

The Board of United States General Appraisers handed down yesterday a decision overruling a protest filed by D. B. Fisk & Co. regarding the classification of merchandise returned by the local appraiser as "vegetable fibre braid, or silk braid."

Duty was assessed by Collector Loeb at the rate of 60 per cent ad valorem under the respective provisions of Paragraph 349 and 402 of the tariff act of 1909. The goods were claimed to be dutiable at 15 or 20 per cent. ad valorem under Paragraph 422 of the same act, either directly or by similitude by virtue of the provision of Paragraph 481 of the act. General Appraiser Howell, who writes the decision for the board, finds that the goods invoiced by the protestant as hat braids made wholly or in chief value of grass are entitled to the lower duty claimed by the importer; in all other instances the claim of the importer for lower rates of duty is denied.

In sustaining a protest filed by J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Co., the board decided that so-called booklets, hand decorated or lithographed, are dutiable properly at the rate of 8 cents per pound as "booklets printed in whole or in part by lithographic process or decoration by hand." General Appraiser Fischer in his decision for the board holds that the merchandise is either hand decorated or lithographed, and under the circumstances must pay duty at the rate of 8 cents per pound.

Big Candy Factory for Jersey City.

Jersey City is about to have the largest candy factory in the world. A deed was recorded in Jersey City yesterday conveying to F. A. Lohmeyer thirty-five lots fronting on Claremont and Orient Avenues and Halstead Street, covering an area of 87,500 square feet. Mr. Lohmeyer is President of the Novelty Candy and Chocolate Company. At present the company has a big plant which takes in twelve lots. Last Tuesday ground was broken adjoining the twelve-lot factory for a seven-story addition.

On the plot just taken the candy company will erect a huge factory. It will cover almost all of the thirty-five lots, and it is rumored that branch factories of the concern now operated in Pittsburg and other cities will be moved to Jersey City. Originally these thirty-five lots were bought by Jabez Brown & Co. of New York, who intended to erect on the property a machine factory.

Taxpayers to Meet.

A regular meeting of the West Side Taxpayers' Association will be held at 267 West Thirty-fourth Street this evening. Reports will be presented by the Rapid Transit Committee, George H. Dressler, Chairman, on the proposed Seventh Avenue subway and on the extension of Seventh Avenue to Canal Street.

The committee is opposed to the project unless the corporations to be benefited thereby signify their willingness to stand their just share of the expense, and the taxpayers' share to be added to the general city tax levy.

The following committees will also report: Law and Legislation Committee, John J. Pheelan, Chairman; Water Committee, Louis Schrag, Chairman; Tenement House Committee, M. J. Horan, Chairman. The matter of the recently appointed committee on the congestion of population will also be discussed.

BELLE MOORE GUILTY OF SELLING GIRLS

Verdict Against the Mulatto Caught in Whitman's "White Slave" Net.

SOME SURPRISES IN CASE

Girls Sold Not Children, as Supposed, but Women Beyond Their Majority, Acting Voluntarily.

Guilty of selling two women for $120 was the verdict found by the jury in General Sessions at 8:45 o'clock last night against Belle Moore, the mulatto "manicurist" who was one of the three caught in the net of the "white slave" investigation. The day's testimony, however, even from the lips of the witnesses for the prosecution, did much to destroy the impression, so emphatically given when the woman was arrested, that the District Attorney's office had captured a "leading white slave dealer of the west side."

Belle Moore is a very thin mulatto, not yet 30 years old, in whose flat, on West Forty-first Street, George A. Miller, a special agent for the Rockefeller Grand Jury, bought Alice Milton and Belle Woods on April 27, ostensibly for use in "Frankie Fuller's" two resorts in Seattle.

There was a great stir in the courtroom yesterday morning, when the prosecution called as its second witness "Mme. Fuller," in the person of Mrs. Frances M. Foster, a Radcliffe College graduate of some years ago. She is in the neighborhood of 40, with dark hair and spectacles. Her voice is unexpectedly deep-toned and vibrant. She said that for more than a year she had not lived with her husband, whom she married in 1900, and that she did not know where he lived now, if, indeed, he was alive at all. Her own address she gave as the New Amsterdam Hotel.

Mrs. Foster's was no pleasant task, to sit on the witness stand and tell a listening roomful of the weeks she spent in the Tenderloin, sometimes staying for hours at a stretch in restaurants, with colored men and women drinking at her elbow. She said that she lived at the Hotel Albany, where George A. Miller, her associate in the work, and a woman called "Lena," supposed to be the Smith College graduate, also lived.

Negotiates with Belle Moore.

"I was supposed to be his woman manager," she said, in a low voice. "He took me to Belle Moore's, and there I told her that I wanted young girls. All those in the West were older, I said, but I was to open a new house in Seattle—an expensive house. I told her that I would pay her well for an innocent girl, if she could get me one, and that at any rate I must have those who showed no trace of negro blood."

She told how she entertained Belle Moore and a girl named "Sal" at luncheon in the Albany, and how later she wrote from Atlantic City urging the Moore woman on to the task they had set before her.

"Be a good old sport, now, Belle, and see what you can do for me," her note read.

Under cross-examination Mrs. Foster was icily calm, and only smiled slightly at some of Lawyer Carlin's sallies. She said that prior to her marriage she had done investigation work for the children's societies of Boston, for whom she had worked three years.

"And do you think it is just the proper thing for a college woman to go about among negro sporting joints?" asked Mr. Karlin.

Here Mrs. Foster asked for a definition of "sporting joint," and in the time gained Assistant District Attorney Press rushed to her assistance with an objection that drowned Mr. Karlin's audible astonishment at her unsophistication. She admitted that she had been twice in Percy Brown's and three times in "Baron" Wilkins's café, but that she had never taken anything except champagne, and that Miller had always been with her.

One Victim More Than a Child.

There followed her on the stand a thin, dark woman named Amy Jackson, an English seamstress, who gave her address as 156 West Twenty-first Street. She testified that on April 27, the day the money passed in Belle Moore's flat, she went with Miller as a witness, under the guise of "Mme. Frankie's" maid. When it came to cross-examination she was close to tears, and Mr. Press felt obliged to admonish Mr. Karlin to "be a gen' man."

With the opening of the case for the defense counsel called as his first witness Alice Milton, one of the two girls who were "bought." It was her first public appearance since she and Belle Woods passed into the hands of the District Attorney on April 27, in whose custody they have been ever since. It was at something of a hazard that the defense called for testimony the nature and color of which they had had no chance to sound.

It was these two girls whom Mr. Rey olds described as children not more than 16 years old, and around whom gathered the anecdotes of the wept-for Teddy bear and the cherished "dolly." Alice Milton, not unlike the barn-storming Little Eva, confessed to 23, and looked the part, despite a cluster of brown curls, which she carefully arranged on either shoulder as she entered the room. She was pleasantly obscured by a mammoth scarlet hat, and throughout her testimony swung a patent-leather toe in the neighborhood of the stenographer's left ear.

Other Girl Had Been Married.

She testified that the first she knew of the so-called "sale" transaction was when a white girl came from Belle Moore's to Mrs. Palmer's house in West Forty-first Street, where she was an inmate, with the message that Belle had a man who wanted to take two girls to Seattle She went there, met Miller, and discussed the plan.

"I said 'sure,'" was the way she summed it up yesterday.

At Belle Moore's suggestion she sent for her friend, Belle Woods, laid the proposal before her, and that night the two of them welcomed Miller at Mrs. Palmer's, where, they testify, he asked them if they were willing to go, and if they wanted any money.

"We said we did," said Alice with a reminiscent smile, and told how Miller went to a tailor for some clothes of hers.

Belle Woods followed her upon the stand. She was 25, she said, and had been married. She had talked it all over with Miller at Mrs. Palmer's, she said, before she ever met Belle Moore, and told him that she would go and that she likewise might change her mind. She promised to be at Belle Moore's on the next day, however, when the money changed hands, and the girls were taken away in a taxicab by Miller and Amy Jackson.

"And where have you been since then?" asked Lawyer Karlin, who was pleased with this testimony, and wanted to show that he had had no opportunity to approach the witnesses.

"In the Magdalen Home," said Alice Milton, with some venom.

With this the defense rested, and in a fiery argument Karlin pleaded for the woman, who had been "seduced into crime through the agency of the Commonwealth of New York." He showered contempt upon Miller, who listened gloomily. Great stress was laid upon the fact that the agent had talked Seattle and wrung a half promise from Belle Woods before his client ever saw the girl.

Mr. Whitman's Summing Up.

"You have had no 'white slave' traffic uncovered here," he said, "and though I am far from blaming Judge Whitman, he has plainly been handed a gold brick."

That Mr. Whitman had not known just what was coming out was the general impression among those who heard yesterday's testimony. There was no doubt that Belle Moore persuaded two girls to join with the Seattle scheme, and that she accepted $120 for her pains, but the testimony of Miller and Mrs. Foster showed that she got the girls for them only after they had scolded and begged, written, and telephoned her for two weeks to do the thing she had promised. They testified she had told them repeatedly that it was "awful hard," and that some of her prospective "slaves" would decide at the last moment that they "couldn't see the Seattle proposition."

Miller admitted that he had spent between $3,000 and $4,000 since Feb. 23, and that no little had gone for drinks and the necessary revelry in the periods of negotiation.

"Champagne out of the county's money," shouted Mr. Karlin as he closed his case.

"Not at all," explained Mr. Whitman later. "The money so spent will be taken from a fund privately given for the investigation.

"By Mr. Rockefeller?" was the next query.

"Not at all, though he offered it at the very beginning."

The jury retired at 6:15, and, after an hour for dinner, returned a verdict at 8:45. Sentence was set for Friday of next week. The woman faces a penalty not exceeding five years in prison or $1,000 fine, or both. She took it in the same bored manner, tinged with a slight exasperation, that she has shown from the first. Her only sign of emotion was a tear or two when her lawyer, in his closing argument, referred to her as "a mean, poor, inconsequential colored woman."

At the beginning of yesterday's session Judge Crain read Karlin a lecture on his conduct of the day before, having ordered him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court. A disposition of the matter was deferred, however, until the close of the case.

COLEMAN A GAMBLERS' DUPE.

So Says Prosecutor In Opening the Trial of Keliher.

BOSTON, May 19.—In its efforts to convict William J. Keliher, a strapping young man of leisure, commonly known as "Big Bill" Keliher, of aiding and abetting George W. Coleman in looting the National City Bank of Cambridge of $309,000, the Government to-day asserted that Keliher so dominated Coleman that the latter could not resist numerous inducements to gamble in New York, despite continuous losses.

Mr. Garland declared that Keliher personally advised the taking of the bank's money, and was the tempter throughout.

Mrs. Margaret L. Taylor, who was detained at Concord, N. H., to-day as a witness, and left there for this city, accompanied by Government Secret Service agents, is a young woman who had been friendly with Coleman. He and Mrs. Taylor attended the same school in Cambridge and were neighbors for some time. Several years ago Mrs. Taylor and her husband separated, and a divorce followed.

The Federal authorities claim that Mrs. Taylor was frequently entertained by Coleman and was one of a number of his friends who occasionally visited him at the bank. The Government officials do not make any charge against her. They desire to know if she can furnish information concerning Coleman's relations with Keliher.

When detained at Concord she intimated that she had gone to that city because she did not want to be called as a witness in the trial of Coleman, but that she was willing to testify in the Keliher and Lockhart cases.

YALE STAR ATHLETE IGNORED.

John Reed Kilpatrick Not Elected to a Senior Society.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 19.—Tap day was held at Yale to-day and elections to the senior societies were made known by slapping between the shoulders the fortunate ones.

The surprise of the day was caused by the failure of John Reed Kilpatrick to win an election to any of the three societies. Not since the "Tap Day," of 1905, when Tom Shevlin failed to get an election to a Yale Senior Society has there been such a sensation. Kilpatrick is an All-America end on the football team and will be the next Captain of the track team. He is the best all-around athlete of the class. Allan Lyle Corey, son of William Ellis Corey, was slapped for membership in Skull and Bones. He is on the football and baseball teams and the "Prom" Committee.

Fred Daly, the football Captain, was elected to Skull and Bones. Harry Van Sinderen of Brooklyn refused an election to Scroll and Key, the first declined in twenty years. He was afterward elected to Skull and Bones. Others chosen were:

Skull and Bones—John McDonnell, New York City; L. R. Wheeler, Portville, N. Y.; John T. Rowland, Greenwich, Conn.; Sherwood S. Day, Catskill, N. Y.

Scroll and Key—E. R. Philbin, Morgan G. O'Brien, F. B. Rives, and S. B. French, 2d, New York; E. H. Rand, Lawrence, L. I.

Wolf's Head—A. A. Lowe, Brooklyn, N. Y.; John T. Terry, 3d, and Edmund C. Stanton, New York; Francis W. Crandall, Westfield, N. Y.; S. F. Freeman, Plainfield, N. J.; Robert B. Luchars, Montclair, N. J.; Edward G. Hotchkiss, Millerton, N. Y.; Henry L. Folsom, Orange, N. J.

JERSEY CENTRAL RAISES PAY.

Engineers to Receive an Increase of from 7 to Over 12 Per Cent.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., May 19.—By the terms of an agreement made between the Central Railway of New Jersey and its locomotive engineers the latter are to receive 4 2-0 cents per mile, as com- May 1, ranging from 7 to a trifle over 12½ per cent.

Engineers in the passenger service are to receive 4 2-19 cents per mile, as compared with 3 9-10 cents. Freight and coal engineers, who have been receiving $4.40 for 100 miles, or for ten hours' service, are to receive $4.75. Others receiving $4 for a ten-hour day are to be paid $4.25, and engineers in yard drill service $3.85 per day instead of $3.60.

The Firemen's Brotherhood and the conductors and trainmen have held a conference with the railroad officials in an effort to agree upon a new schedule of wages and working conditions. It is expected that a general wage increase, such as recently made by a number of other railroads, will be announced.

CITY BREVITIES.

The Hudson River Day Line steamers begin their service to Albany for the season this morning. The steamers of the People's Line for Albany begin to stop regularly at West 129th Street to-day.

William Travers Jerome, counsel for the live poultry dealers under conspiracy and monopoly indictments, had the cases moved from the Supreme Court to General Sessions yesterday, with the consent of the District Attorney. They will be tried before Judge Rosalsky on June 13.

A gust of wind blew a heavy ladder off the roof of the home of Louis Cohen, 196 Madison Avenue, Tompkinsville, yesterday. It struck four-year-old Harry Cohen, who was playing in the yard, and fractured his skull.

PLANS A PLAYGROUND FOR CENTRAL PARK

President Mitchel of the Aldermen Says the Poor Do Not Get Enough Benefit from It.

WOULDN'T MAR ITS BEAUTY

Wants Wading Pool for Babies, Swimming Pools, Nurseries, and Many Other Things.

President Mitchel of the Aldermen will present to the Board of Estimate at its meeting to-day a resolution calling for the establishment of an elaborate playground and recreation centre in Central Park. Mr. Mitchel contends that, while the Park to-day is the haven of those on foot, horsemen, and people who drive in carriages and automobiles, suitable facilities for the enjoyment of the poor, particularly the children, are not provided there.

In commenting on the resolution yesterday, Mr. Mitchel said:

"The city has succeeded in establishing in Central Park almost every conceivable convenience for the automobilist, the horseman, and the pedestrian. With its boulevards, bridle paths, and great lawns it offers much comfort and pleasure to the man who can speed through it in an automobile or on horseback, but we have not as yet equipped this Park with the conveniences that the city might well offer to the many thousands of women and children who find in the Park their only Summer vacation ground.

"I believe that a park, to realize its maximum usefulness, must be not only an ornament, but a complete playground, and that the city's duty does not end when it has provided an open space with trees, grass, highways, and benches.

"During the Summer months a few of our citizens—a small percentage of the general population—are able to spend their time at seaside resorts and at other places outside the city, but there is left in the City of New York a vast number of people whose incomes do not permit them to leave their homes. I believe that it is the duty of this municipality to provide in our public parks every facility for the comfort, convenience, and pleasure of these people. This, I take it, would realize the real purpose of a public park—namely, general public comfort, public pleasure, and public health.

"To develop the Park into a real playground for the women and children of the city would not require any radical physical changes. There are areas in the Park any one of which could be set aside for playground purposes. Chicago's admirable park system demonstrates for us how such playgrounds, equipped with wading pools for babies, swimming pools for older children, bathing houses, nurseries, shelters, and ball grounds can be laid out and made a means of comfort and amusement for countless people who are now restricted to the paths, the benches, and a few of the lawns of Central Park. Such a playground would not rob Central Park of its aesthetic value, and would give to the people of the city a partnership in the Park which they do not now enjoy.

"The expense of the undertaking should not be excessive, and would be by no means prohibitive. No money within reasonable limits, expended by a city to give to its people healthful pleasure, is money wasted. The money spent in providing open air, recreation, and comfort is money saved in hospitals ad sanitaria.

"The purpose of my resolution is to popularize the use of Central Park, a movement which I feel might well be extended later to other of the parks of the city."

Mr. Mitchel has taken the lead in the Board of Estimate in advocating the establishment of more small parks and playgrounds about the city, and is prepared to fight heartily for this new proposal.

KILLS WIFE HE DESERTED.

Horney Then Goes to Newark Police Station and Surrenders.

Because she refused to withdraw a charge she had made against him, Henry Horney, 23 years old, shot and killed his wife yesterday in the home of her mother, Mrs. Mary Sloan, of 132 Boyden Street, Newark, N. J. After killing his wife Horney walked to the First Precinct Police Station and surrendered.

The couple had been married about five years, but they never lived happily together. They had one child, a boy about a year old. Horney and his wife separated several times, and about a year ago they went to live together again. After a few weeks Horney again disappeared, and on this occasion Mrs. Horney made a charge of desertion against him.

NURSES BAR BIG HATS.

Order Delegates to Remove Them at Their Alumnae Convention Here.

Hats exceeding two feet in diameter were barred from Mendelssohn Hall, in West Fortieth Street, at the first session of the thirteenth annual convention of the National Nurses' Associated Alumnae yesterday afternoon. There are 500 graduate nurses, representing over 50,000 other graduate nurses, attending the convention.

It is said some of these young women appeared in the corridor of the hall wearing hats so huge that had their owners been permitted to enter with them on both of the great doors opening into the main assembly room would have had to be opened.

The ban against big hats in a meeting where all those in attendance were women was announced by Miss Jane M. Pindell, the Superintendent of the Training School for Nurses of the Metropolitan Hospital on Blackwell's Island.

Miss Jane A. Delano, the President of the organization, and who is the head of the Nurses' Corps of the United States Army, presided and was the principal speaker. Others who spoke were Miss Ruth Brewster Sherman of Baltimore, Miss Caroline Foot of Chicago, Dr. Marion A. Mead of Minneapolis, Miss Margaret Pepon of San Diego, Cal., and Miss Isabelle McIsaac of Benton Harbor, Mich.

The sessions of the convention will be resumed this morning.
